(Delphi, Troezen, etc.) σκάπετος [m.] 'grave, tomb', Megara σκάπεδος after δάπεδον, πέδον (Solmsen 1909:196); also κάπετος 'id.' (Il., Hp.), also 'spade' (Gortyn)?, uncertain σκαπέτωσις 'the digging' (Troezen). 8. σκαφαλος· ἀντλητήρ 'one who draws water' (H.), like πάσσαλος etc.; an λ-suffix also in σκαφλεύς = σκαφεύς (Athens IV[a])? 9. σκαπ-άνη [f.] 'shovel, spade' (Theoc., AP), also 'excavation' (Thphr.), with -ανήτης [m.] 'digger' (Zonar.), -ανεύς [m.] 'id.' (Lyc., Phld., Str.), -ανεύω [v.] 'to dig up' (inscr. Magnesia, Phld. Rh.). 10. σκάμμα [n.] 'the digging, ditch, place dug up' (Pl. Lg., Hell. and late). 11. περίσκαψις [f.] 'the digging up' (pap. VI[p], Gp.). 12. σκαπτήρ, -ῆρος [m.] 'digger' (Margites, X. apud Poll.), see Fraenkel 1910: 107; 2, 55, Benveniste 1948: 39; fem. -τειρα (AP). 13. TN Σκαπτὴ ὕλη (Thrace; Hdt. et al.) with Σκαπτησυλικός (Att. inscr.), -ίτης [m.] (St. Byz.); on the formation see Schwyzer: 452.
•ETYM The basis of the above forms is either σκαπ- (with σκαφ- analogically after θάπτω: τάφος, ταφῆναι) or σκαφ- (with σκαπ- before voiceless consonant, and analogically before vowel). In the case of σκαπ-, the relic Lat. scapulae, U scapla [acc.sg.] 'shoulder-blade' has been compared, assuming that it originally meant 'shovel' as a primary agent noun (cf. σκάφαλος above). In the case of σκαφ-, σκάπτω could formally correspond to a verb for 'plane, scratch, etc.' in Lat. scabō, OHG scaban, Lith. skabiù (beside skobiù, skõbti) 'to scoop out with a chisel, vel sim.', to which the Slavic group of Ru. skóbel' 'plane-iron', etc. is connected. Semantically, σκάφη, σκάφος, etc. fit better with 'to plane, scoop out' than with 'to dig' (extensive treatment in Solmsen 1909: 196ff.), but such words may of course easily change their meaning.
Frisk's discussion of σκάπτω, referring to Pok. 930ff., is highly dated. We now know, for example, that PIE did not have an ablaut e ~ a, so the words with -e- (e.g. ►κόπτω, ►σκέπαρνος) must be omitted. Connection with ►σκήπτω and ►σκίπων is formally and semantically unfeasible. The same holds for that with Lith. skõbti, 1sg. skobiù, as Greek has no form with long ā (in other words, there is no trace of ablaut). It seems that the forms κάπετος and ►σκάπετος may be Pre-Greek, and well as other forms with σκαπ-, like σκάφαλος and the strange σκαφλεύς. The other forms seem to be based on skab[h]-*, as in Lat. scabō and OHG scaban. I suggest that this root is a loan from a European substrate language.

(sch., Suid.), σκάρῑφος (-ον) [m., n.] 'outline, sketch, slate-pencil' (H., sch., EM), acc. to sch. also = κάρφος, φρύγανον 'dry stalk or stick', probably a back-formation to the verb.
•ETYM These words, which show a stem σκαρῑφ- < *skarīb^h-, cannot be separated from Lat. scrībō 'to write' < *skrīb^h-, Latv. skrīpât 'to scratch, scribble, write down' < *skrīp-, ON hrífa 'scratch, tear' < *krīp-, and MIr. scrīp(a)id 'scratches' < *skrīp-, although these forms cannot be satisfactorily combined under one PIE etymon (the alternation *b^h/p, the long *ī, the absence vs. presence of *-a- are all inexplicable). We are, therefore, rather dealing with an European substrate word.

•ETYM The present σκεδάννυμι is a recent formation from the aorist σκεδάσαι. The closest cognate is Av. scindaiieiti 'breaks, destroys' with nasal infix. Without anlauting s-, we find the nasal present in ToAB kät^{ā}- 'to strew (out)', pres. ToB katnaṃ. Lith. kedénti, 1sg. kedenù 'to tug, pluck', kedėti 'to burst' are unrelated in view of the failing reflex of Winter's Law (the semantics are also weak). The appurtenance of Alb. çanj, çaj 'to split, tear up, plough', perhaps < *sked-n̥-ie/o, is unclear. Several verbal nouns are found in various languages, especially with a suffix -r-, and verbs built from these: Arm. šert 'chip, piece of wood', if from *sked-ri- (anlaut uncertain), Lith. kedìnti [f.] 'splinter', Latv. skadrs 'easy to split', ME scateren, MoE scatter, MIr. scaindrim 'to split in two'. Cf. ►σχίζω, ►κέδματα.

σκεθρός [adj.] 'exact, careful' (Hp., Gal., Lyc.). ◂GR▸
•VAR -ῶς (A. Pr., E. Fr. 87).
•ETYM According to Frisk s.v., this word is a formation in -θρο- from a stem σχε- as found in σχεῖν 'to hold' (cf. ►ἔχω), showing the reflex of Grassmann's Law. Since the suffix -θρο- is rather rare, the assumption that this word is a -ρο-derivation from the verb σχέθω 'to hold back' might have more merit (contra Chantraine 1933: 225, Schwyzer: 481). We must then assume, however, that in σχέθω the effect of Grassmann's Law was analogically eliminated, while it was retained in σκεθρός. Semantically, we might think of a development 'holding back' > 'reserved, exercising restraint' > 'careful'.

H., Prol.), ἀ-σκελής (Hom., Nic.) 'powerless(?), incessantly(?)' (interpretation not fully clear).
•ETYM The aorist forms σκήλειε and ἐνι-σκήλῃ must stand for σκειλ- < *σκελ-σ-, perhaps with old analogy to σφήλειε (Schwyzer: 756). Forms like ἐσκληῶτες (A. R.) are built on the basis of τεθνηῶτες, ἑστηῶτες (cf. Kretschmer Glotta 3 (1910-1912): 311f.), ἀπο-σκλαίη on the basis of τεθναίη, σταίη, etc. Because of Dor. σκληρός and of σκελετός, the forms in σκλαι- cannot be old.
The system with perf. ἔσκληκα, aor. σκλῆναι beside a present σκέλλομαι (probably < *σκελ-ι̯ε/ο-, but possibly from a nasal present with analogical root vocalism) resembles e.g. τέτληκα, τλῆναι beside ἀνα-τέλλω. Although the perfect stem ἔσκληκα is widely attested, the other stems were ousted by forms of the verbs ξηραίνω and αὐαίνω 'id.'. Although the verb looks Indo-European and could be projected back to a pre-form *$skelh_1$-, good verbal comparanda are lacking. Nominal cognates may be MoHG schal 'faint, vapid', LG 'dry, barren', ME schalowe 'faint, tired, shallow' (E shallow) < PGm. skala-* and, without initial *s-, LG hal(l)- 'dry, meager', MoHG hellig 'tired, exhausted (by thirst)', and possibly Latv. kàlss 'meager', kàlst, 1sg. kàlstu 'to dry up'. The adjective σκληφρός 'slender, weak, small, thin' (Pl., Theopomp. Com.; also Arist.) has been influenced in form and meaning by ἐλαφρός.

Perhaps ►σκώληξ contains a lengthened grade. On σκαληνός, see ►σκάλλω; on σκελίς, see ►σχελις.
•ETYM Formally comparable to Lat. scelus [n.] 'malice, badness, crime' < skel-o-*, which points to an original meaning 'curvation, deflection', which in Greek is best witnessed by e.g. σκολιός 'crooked, unjust'. Other formations are skel-ko-, attested in OHG scelah, OE sceolh 'oblique, curved, squinting', MoHG scheel, ON skjalgr 'oblique, squinting', and skel-no-*, attested in Alb. çalë 'lame'. S., D. H., etc.) 'covering, protecting', -αστρον [n.] 'cover, veil' (Sm.), (παρα-)σκεπ-άστρα [f.] 'bandage' (Gal.).
Although the stem looks IE and could be projected back to a pre-form skep-*, no good cognates are known. Only some Balto-Slavic forms like Lith. kepùre, Ru. čepéc 'cap, hood' may be connected, although these reflect an s-less stem kep-*.

Denominative verbs: 5. σκην-άομαι 'to pitch a tent, camp' (Att.), also with κατα- etc.; σκην-άω [v.] 'to feast' (X.). 6. σκην-έω 'to be in a tent, to camp' (Att., especially X.), not easily distinguished from -άω in non-presentic forms; also with δια-, συν-, ἀπο- etc.; thence -ημα (Dor. σκάναμα) [n.] 'tent, camp' (A., X., Epid. III^{a}), also 'body' (Macedonian inscr.; cf. σκῆνος). 7. σκην-όω 'to pitch a tent, to camp' (Pl., X., etc.), often with κατα-, παρα-, συν-, ἐπι-, ἀπο- etc.; thence -ωμα [n.], mostly pl., 'camp, dwelling', also 'body' (E., LXX etc.), with κατα- 'cover, curtain' (A. Cho. 985), also -ωσις (κατα-) [f.] (Agatharch., LXX etc.); -ωταί· συσκηνοῦντες 'living in the same tent' (H.).

Also σκῆνος, Dor. (Ti. Locr.) σκᾶνος [n.] 'body' (= tent of the soul), 'corpse' (Hp., Democr., Ion. inscr., Nic., Ep. Cor.), see Leumann 1950: 308f.); gender after σῶμα, cf. also ►κτῆνος, ►σμῆνος etc. Unclear is σκῆν· ὅ τινες μὲν ψυχήν, τινὲς δὲ φάλαιναν (H.), i.e. 'butterfly, moth' (cf. σκήνωμα· papilio gloss.).

•ETYM According to DELG s.v., σκηνή originally denoted any light construction of cloth hung between tree branches in order to provide shadow, under which one could shelter, sleep, celebrate festivities, etc. Formation with a suffix -νή (cf. ποινή, εὐνή, φερνή, etc.; see Chantraine 1933: 191f. and Schwyzer: 489), derived from the root σκη-/σκᾱ- < ske*h_2-, which is found in ►σκιά 'shade' as well. See there for further etymology. Borrowed as Lat. scaena (only in the sense of 'stage').

σκηνίπτω [v.] only ἐσκήνιψε· διέφθειρε, διεσκέδασεν 'destroyed utterly, shattered' and διασκηνῖψαι· διαφορῆσαι, διασπεῖραι 'to disperse, scatter about'. διεσκηνίφθη δὲ διεσωματίσθη (H.); to this γαίῃ ... διεσκήνιψε 'shattered to the floor' (Nic. Th. 193). ◂?▸

σκήπτομαι [v.] 'to support oneself, lean, pretend something, use as a pretention', act. 'to throw down, sling', intr. 'to throw oneself down, fall down' (IA), ἐπι-σκήπτω also 'to impose, command', med. (Att. juridical language) 'to object, prosecute, raise a complaint'. ◄EUR?►

•DER σκῆψις [f.] 'excuse, pretention, pretext' (IA), ἐπίσκηψις [f.] 'objection, complaint' (Att.); ἀπόσκημμα· ἀπέρεισμα 'prop' (H.) (A. Fr. 18 = 265 M.), ἐπίσκημμα = ἐπίσκηψις (Lex. Rhet. Cant.).
Beside this, several expressions for 'stick, etc.': 1. σκᾶπος· κλάδος, καὶ ἄνεμος ποιός 'branch, a certain wind' (H.); for the latter meaning, cf. σκηπτός below. 2. σκηπ-άνη [f.] (AB) with -άνιον [n.] 'stick, scepter' (N 59, Σ 247, Call. Fr. anon. 48, AP), σκαπάνιον· βακτηρία, ἄλλοι σκίπωνα 'staff, crutch' (H.). 3. σκᾶπτον [n.] (Dor.) 'id.' (Pi.), IA σκῆπτον in σκηπτ-οῦχος 'stick-, scepter-bearer' = 'ruler' (Hom. etc.), with the Persians and other Asiatic peoples who have a high office at the court (Semon., X., etc.), with -ία [f.] (A. etc.). 4. σκῆπτρον [n.] 'id.' (Il., epic poet.); like βάκτρον, etc. Semantically more remote: 5. σκηπτός [m.] 'thunderbolt, lightning, suddenly breaking storm' (trag., X., D., Arist. etc.); cf. φρυκτός, στρεπτός.

Denominative verb σκιάω (Od., Hell. and late epic), σκιάζω (IA) 'to shade, overshadow, shroud in darkness', forms: σκιάσαι (Φ 232; after ἐλάσαι etc., see Chantraine 1942: 410), fut. Att. σκιῶ, late σκιάσω, perf. pass. ἐσκίασμαι (Semon., S.), aor. σκιασθῆναι (E., Pl., Arist.), also with ἐπι-, κατα-, συν-, περι-, ἀπο-; thence (ὑπο-, συ-)σκίασις, (ἐπι-, etc.)σκιασμός, (ἐπι-, etc.)σκίασμα, σκιασ-τής, -τικός (almost always late); the bahuvrīhis κατα-, ἐπί-σκιος etc. function as back-formations. On σκιά and derivations in Homer and in Aeolic lyric, see Treu 1955: 115ff., 213ff.
•ETYM Skt. chāyā́ [f.] 'shadow', also 'image, reflex, resemblance', Av. a-saiia- 'who casts no shadow' (cf. Gr ἄ-σκιος) , MoP sāya 'shadow', and Latv. seja 'face' must reflect skeHieh₂-*. On the other hand, Gr. σκιά, together with ToB skiyo and Alb. hie 'shadow', must be interpreted as reflecting skiHeh₂-, from older skHieh₂- with laryngeal metathesis. On the basis of ►σκηνή, Dor. σκᾱνά 'tent' < 'cloth to provide shadow', the root can be identified as skeh₂-, which means that we are dealing with an original ablauting proterodynamic ih₂-stem skéh₂-ih₂*, skh₂-iéh₂-s*. In Indo-Iranian and Baltic, the full-grade stem was generalized, whereas in the other branches the zero-grade stem spread throughout the paradigm. The Slavic forms, OCS sěnь and Ru. sen' [f.] 'shadow', reflect skeh₂-i-n-*, with an extra suffix -n-. The hapax ►σκαιός 'shadowy' reflects skeh₂-i-uo-*, and perhaps σκοιός (in H.: σκοιά· σκοτεινά, σκοιόν· ... σύσκιον) can be regarded as an o-grade variant skoh₂-i-uo-*. The relation with ►σκότος 'darkness' is unclear.

σκιμᾱλίζω [v.] 'to jeer, flout' (Ar. Ach. 444, Pax 549, D. L. 7, 17); acc. to gramm. (Moer., Phryn., H.) = καταδακτυλίζω; acc. to sch. Ar. Pax ad loc. 'to hold up the middle finger' (sens. obsc.). ◂PG(S)▸ •DER σκίμαλλος (PLond. = Aegyptus 6, 194), probably designation of a finger.
•ETYM The verb σκιμᾱλίζω seems to be derived from a noun *σκιμᾱλος, which may be attested as σκίμαλλος (with geminate -λλ-). The formation resembles those of κόβαλος, σκίταλος, and other comedic words (cf. Björck 1950: 46f., 259f.). Since all words in -αλλ-(ος) seem to be of Pre-Greek origin (Beekes 2008), these words are likely to be Pre-Greek, too.

σκιμβός [adj.] = χωλός, σκαμβός 'lame, crooked' (H., sch. Ar. Nu. 254). ◂PG(V)▸ •DER σκιμβάζει· χωλεύει 'is or becomes lame' (Ar. Fr. 853, H.), to which σκιμβασμός· φιλήματος εἶδος 'kind of kiss' (H.). Semantically unclear is σκιμβάδες· ὕλη εὔθετος εἰς τοίχων ἐπίθεσιν, σκέπης χάριν (H.). Seemingly primary is σκίψαι· ὀκλάσαι. Ἀχαιοί 'to squat (Achaean)' (H.). Without σ-: κιμβάζει· στραγγεύεται (στρατ- cod.) 'to loiter' (H.); ὀκιμ-βάζειν (ὀ- hardly from ὀκλάζειν?)· διατρίβειν καὶ στραγγεύεσθαι (στρατ-cod.) 'to wear away, loiter' (H., Phot.).
•ETYM Although an IE origin has been suggested (connections with e.g. ON skeifr 'slanting', Latv. šķībs 'id.' in Pok. 922), the alternation between σκιμβ-, σκιβ-, κιμβ-, and ὀκιμβ-, as well as σκαμβ-, in ▸σκαμβός 'crooked, bandy-legged' clearly points to a Pre-Greek origin (cf. Fur.: 154, 286).

•ETYM Epic and poetic verb, on the one hand reminiscent of σκήπτω (-ομαι), on the other of χρίμπτω (-ομαι; cf. Nic. Th. 336 ἐνι-σκίμψῃ with v.ll. -χρίμψῃ and -σκήψῃ), perhaps arisen from a cross of both (cf. Güntert 1914: 29). Usually connected with ▸σκῖπων.

σκίναξ, -ᾰκος [m.] designation or epithet of the hare, λαγωός (Nic.). ◂PG▸

•ETYM Often compared with ▸κίνδαξ, although this is semantically rather gratuitious (the meaning of σκίναξ is unclear). If connected, the variation between σκιν- / κινδ-, as well as the presence of the suffix -ακ-, points to a Pre-Greek origin.

σκίναρ [n.] 'body' (Nic. Th. 694). ◂PG?▸
•ETYM Often connected with σκῆνος 'corpse' (see ▸σκηνή) which, if correct, could point to a Pre-Greek origin (variation η/ι, cf. Fur.: 171[174]).

•ETYM Frisk groups all these words with σχίζω 'to split', but this is incorrect: σχίζω never shows σκ- nor -νδ-. The root variations, σκινδ-/σκιδ-/σχινδ-/σχιδ-, as well as the presence of the suffixes -αλμ- (cf. ▸ὀφθαλμός; Beekes 1969: 193f., Beekes 2008) and -υλ- rather point to a Pre-Greek origin. The second α in σκινδάλαμος is a secondary prop vowel, which is frequent in Pre-Greek (Fur.: 378-385). See ▸σχίζω.

•ETYM The interpretation of this word as a bahuvrīhi compound of σκιά and οὐρά, "who generates shade with his tail" (thus e.g. Frisk), looks like a folk etymology rather than a serious explanation. The suffix -ουρος could point to Pre-Greek origin (from -ar^w-o-?). Borrowed as MLat. scuriolus*, which is the source of MoFr. écureuil, MoE squirl, etc.

σκῖπων, -ωνος [m.] 'staff, stick', also 'crutch' (Hdt. 4, 172, Cratin. [lyr.], Ar. [anap.], E. [anap.], Call., AP, Hp., Epid. IV^a). ◁?▷ •VAR v.ll. σκήπων (after σκῆπτρον?), σκίμπων (after σκίμπτομαι?).
•COMP As a first member e.g. in ἀ-σκίπων 'staffless' (AP).
•ETYM Ionic poetic word, built like κύφων, δόλων, and other tool names (Chantraine 1933: 161f.), and almost identical with Lat. scīpiō, -ōnis [m.] 'staff (as a sign of power and dignity, like σκῆπτρον). The further similarity with σκηπάνιον, σκῆπτρον, and cognates (see ►σκήπτομαι) has been observed for a long time; however, the forms cannot be combined under one pre-form.
It is unlikely that ►σκίμπτομαι is a denominative nasal present (like σκήπτομαι from σκᾶπος); for a different explanation, see s.v. Further, connection is considered with the semantically unclear σκοῖπος· ἡ ἐξοχὴ τῶν ξύλων, ἐφ' ὧν εἰσι οἱ κέραμοι (H.), probably of the supporting beams on which the tiles rest. Connection with σκῆπτρον, etc. seems impossible (DELG refers to Benveniste 1935: 167 and to Szemerényi 1980: 133). It is unclear how to assess the similarity of the Latin form.

σκῖραφος [m.] meaning uncertain; in Hippon. 86 = 129a [pl.] explained as 'treachery' by Masson; after Hdn. 1, 225, 13 = ἀκόλαστος καὶ κυβευτής 'undisciplined, gambler' (2, 581, 27 ἀ. κ. κυβιστής), acc. to EM 717, 28 = ὄργανον κυβευτικόν 'tool used in gambling' (alternative supposition). ◁?▷
•DER σκιραφ-εῖον (-ιον) [n.] 'gambling-house' (Isoc., Theopomp. Hist.), -ευτής [m.] 'dice-player' (Amphis 25), -ώδης 'treacherous' (AB).
•ETYM Because of the unclear meaning, without etymology. According to Hdn. (l.cc.), ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν Σκίρῳ (suburb of Athens; see on σκίρον, known as a home of prostitutes and gamblers) διατριβόντων. Or is it a variant of κίραφος = ἀλώπηξ? Cf. ἀλωπεκίζειν· ἀπατᾶν 'to deceive' (H.).

σκίρον [n.] a white parasol or canopy, which was carried at processions from the Acropolis to a place called Σκῖρον (Σκίρον) (later a suburb of Athens) on the holy road to Eleusis in honor of Athena Skiras and other deities (Lysimachid., sch. Ar. Ec. 18); plur. Σκίρα name of a women's festival in honor of Demeter, Kore and Athena Polias (Ar., inscr. et al.). ◁?▷
•COMP As a first member in Σκιρο-φόρια [n.pl.] 'id.' (H., Phot., Suid.); hence Σκιροφοριών, -ῶνος [m.] Att. month name, = June-July (Antipho, inscr., etc.).
•ETYM Etymology not fully certain. Comparison with σκιά 'shade' is semantically attractive, but formally somewhat difficult: σκιά reflects skh₂-ieh₂-*, the *-i- of which belongs to the suffix and cannot therefore be equated with the -i- in σκίρον, which would have to be from skh₂-i-ro-* (vel sim.).
Often equated with Alb. hir 'grace of God' (Jokl 1923: 67, following Bugge) through a semantic development comparable to the one in the Germanic adj. for 'clear, gleaming, bright', e.g. Go. skeirs, ON skírr, MoHG schier, which would have a basic meaning '(subdued) shine, reflex' (Pok. 917f.). Deubner 1932: 40ff. argues that the interpretation of σκίρον as 'parasol' is a late learned construction, and interprets σκίρον as a designation of several ritual items.

•ETYM Perhaps connected with ►σκολύπτειν, although a Pre-Greek origin seems more likely.

σκολόπαξ, -ακος [m.] name of a bird, usually identified with ἀσκαλώπας (-πᾶς?) [m.] (Arist.) and explained as 'woodcock, Scolopax rusticola'; cf. Thompson 1895 s.vv. ⊲PG?⊳
•ETYM On the basis of the equation with ἀσκαλώπας (-πᾶς?), it is considered to be a Pre-Greek word by Fur.: 344. The resemblance with σκόλοψ 'pole' (referring to the long beak of the snipe?) might be due to folk-etymological adaptation.

σκολόπενδρα [f.] 'millipede, sowbug'; also name of an animal of the sea (Arist., etc.). ⊲PG⊳ •DER σκολόπενδρ-ον (Thphr.), -ιον (Dsc.) [n.] plant name, after the form of the leaves acc. to Strömberg 1940: 42; -ώδης 'resembling a σ.' (Str.).
•ETYM The etymological proposal by Guasparri Glotta 76 (1998): 199-201, who suggests a derivation from σκολοπ- 'biting' and ἔντερον, also 'earth worm', is formally untenable and therefore unconvincing. Rather a Pre-Greek word.

σκόλοψ, -οπος [m.] 'pointed pole, palisade, prickle' (epic ion. poet. Il., Hell. and late prose), for Att. χάραξ, σταυρός, -ωμα. ⊲PG(V)⊳ •VAR Also σκόλοφρον· θρανίον 'bench' (H.), perhaps after δίφρος; cf. σκόλυθρον.
•DER Diminutive σκολόπ-ιον [n.] (Antyll. apud Orib.), -ηὶς μοῖρα 'the destiny of being impaled' (Man.), after βασιλ-ηΐς etc.; -ίζω 'to provide with a σ.' (Stad.) with -ισμός [m.] 'the impaling, the spearing' (Vett. Val.); often ἀνα-σκολοπίζω 'to stick on a pole, impale' (Hdt., etc.) with -ισις [f.] (sch., Eust.), ἀπο- 'to remove the poles' (Aq.).
•ETYM Often derived from ►σκάλλω 'to stir, hoe', but the formation is peculiar. The interpretation of σκόλοπ- as a disyllabic stem cognate with e.g. Lat. scalpō 'to scratch, cut with a sharp instrument, etc.', OHG scelifa 'membranous shell', Lith. sklem̃pti, sklem̃bti 'to plane, etc.' (Pok. 926) is formally even more unlikely. The variant σκόλοφρον with -φρ- rather points to a Pre-Greek origin; cf. Fur.: 107.

σκολύθριον [n.] 'footstool' (Pl. Euthd. 278b, Poll.). ⊲PG?(V)⊳ •VAR κόλυθρον (Telecl.).

•DER σκόλυθρος 'low' (H., Phot., Suid.), σκολύθρων· ταπεινῶν. ἀπὸ σκολύθρων δίφρων (H.).
•ETYM Diminutive of an unattested word *σκόλυθρον, which seems to be a variant of κόλυθρον. This could point to Pre-Greek origin. A connection with σκολύπτειν (thus Frisk s.v.) is formally and semantically unlikely.

σκόλυμος [m.] name of a kind of thistle with an edible flower base, 'Scolymus hispanicus, artichoke, Cynara scolymus' (Hes., Alc., Arist., etc.); on the mg., see Dawkins JHS 56 (1936): 6. ⊲PG(V)⊳ •VAR σκόλυμον (Zonar.). On σκόλυβος, see below.
•DER σκολυμ-ώδης 'like σ.' (Thphr.).
•ETYM A variant of this word can be found in σκόλυβος· ὁ ἐσθιόμενος βολβός 'edible onion' (H.). The variation β/μ is a well-known Pre-Greek phenomenon.

σκολύπτειν [v.] · ἐκτίλλειν, κολούειν 'to pluck out, cut short'; σκολύψαι· κολοῦσαι, κολοβῶσαι 'to cut short, shorten'; ἀνασκολύψας· γυμνώσας 'having stripped' (H.). ⊲PG(V)⊳ •VAR Beside σκολύβρα· σκυθρωπή 'sad' (H.) we find σκολύφρα· σκυθρωπή, σκληρά, ἐργώδης, δυσχερής 'sad, hard, difficult, intractable'.
•COMP Often with ἀπο- 'to skin, strip off, circumcise' (Archil. 124, S. Fr. 423, Ael. Dion. etc.).
•ETYM The variation between σκολυπ- and κολοβ- in ►κολοβός 'curtailed, cut short' points to a Pre-Greek origin. A connection with ►σκάλλω 'to stir, hoe' (thus e.g. Frisk) is therefore unlikely. Also, the variation between -βρ- and -φρ- in σκολύβρα and σκολύφρα (whether or not they are really connected with σκολύπτειν; the semantics are quite far) points to a Pre-Greek origin of these words (Fur.: 171).

σκόμβρος [m.] 'mackerel' (Epich., Ar., Arist. etc.). ⊲PG?⊳
•DER Diminutive σκομβρίδες· ἰχθύες 'fishes' (H.); also Arist. HA 543b 5 (v.l. σκορπίδες). Additionally, the apparently denominative σκομβρίσαι· γογγύσαι. καὶ παιδιᾶς ἀσελγοῦς εἶδος 'to murmur, grumble; kind of wanton sport'; also σκομβρίζειν as an explanation of ῥαθαπυγίζειν 'to slap the buttocks' (H.).
•ETYM Origin unclear. The word may well be of Pre-Greek origin; cf. Fur.: 124. The word was borrowed as Lat. scomber.

•DER σκοπελ-ίζω [v.] 'to set up a watch-tower', with -ισμός [m.] (Ulp. in Dig.).
•ETYM Although within Greek the meaning 'watch-tower' seems to be a later development out of original 'cliff, rock, mountain peak', an etymological connection with σκοπή 'watch-tower', σκοπιά 'watch-tower, cliff', etc. (see ►σκέπτομαι) might suggest that a meaning 'watch-tower' was the starting-point of this word after all. Older etymological connections (e.g. in Frisk s.v.) involving an alleged PIE root skep-* 'to cut' (thought to be attested in ►σκέπαρνος) are outdated, as such a root does not seem to have existed. Borrowed as Lat. scopulus.

•VAR Ion. -έομαι.
•DER σκορδίν-ημα [n.] (κορδ- v.l. Erot.), -ησμός [m.] (Hp., Gal.).
•ETYM Presumably from a non-attested noun *σκόρδινον, -ος. A more primary form is probably represented by σκορδάζειν· σπᾶσθαι (H.). Hardly related to ►κόρδαξ, ►κραδάω; no further etymology.

σκορδύλη ⇒κορδύλη.

σκορόβυλος [m.] κάνθαρος 'dung-beetle' (H.). ◂PG(V)▸ •ETYM Clearly connected with ►κάραβος. The word therefore seems to continue *σκαρ(α)β-υλ-, with ο from α before υ in the next syllable.

σκόροδον [n.] 'garlic, Allium sativum' (Milete VI^a, Ion., com., Thphr. et al.). ◂PG?▸
•VAR Hell. and late also σκόρδον (see Schwyzer: 259); there is also σκοραδον (inscr. Cyrene), which may be secondary.
•COMP A number of compounds, e.g. σκοροδ-άλμη [f.] 'salty garlic-broth' (com.), cf. Risch IF 59 (1949): 58; ὀφιο-σκόρ(ο)δον [n.] kind of wild garlic (Gal., Ps.-Dsc.); cf. Strömberg 1940: 33.
•DER σκορόδ-ιον [n.], -ίζω [v.] 'to feed or to spice with garlic' (com.), σκοροδοῦν· συνουσιάζειν 'to have intercourse with' (H.); on the mg., see Specht KZ 62 (1935): 215.
•ETYM Related to Alb. hurdhë [f.] 'garlic' and Arm. xstor, dial. sxtor 'id.'. The Albanian form can be reconstructed as skord-, the Armenian word as skodor-, which was metathesized from skorod-*, but the details regarding the developments of initial cluster are obscure (Ačaṙyan in Martirosyan 2010). Given the alternation skord- ~ skorod-, the word must be non-Indo-European, i.e. Pre-Greek or adopted from a local language in the Pontic area. For other names for onion and garlic, cf. ►κρόμμυον and ►πράσον; see also ►βολβός.

σκορπίος [m.] 'scorpion' (A. Fr. 169 = 368M.); often metaph. as epithet of a fish (com., Arist. et al.), after the poisonous stings, see Strömberg 1943: 124f., Thompson 1947 s.v.; also σκόρπ-αινα, -ίς, on which see below; of a plant (Thphr.), see Strömberg 1937: 50f.; of a constellation (Cleostrat., Hell.), see Scherer 1953: 170; a war machine for firing arrows (Hero et al.), whence σκορπίζω (see below); of a stone (Orph.), also σκορπῖτις, -ίτης. ◂PG(V)▸ •COMP As a first member e.g. in σκορπί-ουρος (-ον) plant name (Dsc.).
•DER 1. Substantives: σκορπ-ίον [n.] plant name (Dsc.), -ίδιον [n.] 'small slinging-machine' (Plb., LXX), -ίς [f.] (Arist.), -αινα [f.] (Ath.) fish name (see above); -ῖτις [f.], -ίτης [m.] name of a stone (Plin., late pap.), after the color and shape, Redard 1949: 61); -ιών, -ιῶνος [m.] month name in Alexandria (Ptol.). 2. Adjectives: σκορπ-ιώδης 'resembling the σ.' (Arist., Ph. et al.), -ήϊος, -ειος 'belonging to the σ.' (Orph., Man.), -ιόεις 'id.' (Nic.), -ιακός 'id.' (medic.), -ιανός 'born under the sign σ.' (Astr.). 3. Verbs: σκορπ-ίζω 'to scatter' (Hecat.[?], Hell. and late), also with δια- etc., -ιαίνομαι 'to be enraged' (Procop.), σκορπιοῦται· ἀγριαίνεται, ἐρεθίζεται 'gets angry, is provoked' (H.).
•ETYM The scorpion is widely distributed in the southern parts of Europe, but there are isolated populations as far north as the Isle of Sheppy in Great Britain. The Indo-Europeans, whose homeland was probably located to the North of the Black Sea, did not have a word for the scorpion, and the Greeks must therefore have adopted it from a different language when they arrived in the Mediterranean. Acc. to Fur. (see his index), ►κᾱ́ραβος, καράμβιος, ►σκαραβαῖος, ►κεράμβυξ, κεράμβηλον, κηραφίς, and ►γραψαῖος all continue the same Pre-Greek word, which seems possible. It is to be noted that most forms can easily be reduced to a structure kara^{m}p-, except for γραψαῖος and σκορπίος. The word does not derive from PIE skerp-* 'to scratch', seen in OE sceorfan 'to scratch' and Latv. šk̦ērpêt 'to cut grass'. The Greek word was borrowed as Lat. scorpius, -iō.

•VAR Also [n.] (since V^a), after e.g. φῶς, see Egli 1954: 64f.
•COMP Some compounds, e.g. σκοτο-μήν-ιος "having the moon in the dark", 'moonless', epithet of νύξ (ξ 457), univerbation of σκότος and μήν(η); besides the abstract σκοτο-μην-ία [f.] 'moonlessness, moonless night' (Hell.), also σκοτο-μήνη 'id.' (Democr.[?], LXX) and (after the nouns in -αινα) σκοτό-μαινα [f.] 'id.' (AP et al.). Further σκοτο-διν-ία, Ion. -ίη [f.] 'swindle' (Hp., Pl.), with -δινιάω [v.] (Ar., Pl.); also -δινος [m.] 'id.' •ETYM The word σκότος has a close cognate in a Germanic word for 'shadow': Go. skadus, OE sceadu (also 'darkness'), OHG scato, -(a)wes, from PGm. skađu-* (after the opposite *haiðu-, originally 'appearance in the light' in Go. haidus 'art, manner', etc). Beside these, we find Celtic forms with an apparent lengthened grade, e.g. OIr. scáth [n.] 'shadow'. We may reconstruct either IE skoto-, -tu* (Greek and Germanic) beside skōto-* (Celtic), or an ablauting root noun sk(e)h₃t-* (Matasović 2008 s.v. skāto-*). Cf. also on ► σκιά.

Especially in σκυθρ-ωπός 'with a gloomy look' (Hp., Att.; cf. Sommer 1948: 7 and 9), whence -ωπότης [f.] (Hp.), -ωπάζω [v.] 'to look gloomy, etc.', -ωπασμός [f.] (Plu.).
•ETYM Like in ἐριδμαίνω beside ἐρίζω, σκυδμαίνω beside σκύζομαι has its -μ- from πημαίνω, θερμαίνω, etc. For σκυθρός, there is no reason to assume a pre-form *σκυδ-θρος (whence *σκυσ-θρός and, with dissimilation, σκυθρός).
There is no certain etymology. Lith. (pra-)skùsti, 1sg. -skundù, pret. -skudaũ 'to become nervous, tired, begin to feel pain', Latv. skundêt 'to grumble, commiserate, blame, grudge', etc. (Pok. 955) cannot be related, as the accentuation points to -dʰ-*.

•ETYM Words for young animals often end in -αξ (cf. μεῖραξ, δέλφαξ, πόρταξ; see Chantraine 1933: 377ff.). Therefore, σκύλαξ could be related to σκύλιον [n.] name of a shark (Arist.) and to σκύλλα fish name (Nic. Fr. 137 Schn.); see Solmsen 1909: 20¹; forms with a geminate are σκύλ(λ)ος = σκύλαξ, κύων (EM, H.), σκυλλίς· κληματίς (H., Strömberg 1940: 31), and κύλλα· σκύλαξ (κύλλας· κύλαξ cod.) Ἠλεῖοι (H.). Σκύλλη, Att. Σκύλλα ("the bitch"), name of the well-known sea-monster (Od.), is perhaps related.
There are no certain cognates outside Greek. Arm. c'ul, gen. c'l-u 'young bull', from IE skul-* or skōl-*, was compared by Meillet BSL 26 (1925): 20f. Comparison with Lith. skalikas 'barking dog' (from skālyti 'to bark hunting') and kalė̃ 'bitch' go back to (s)kol-*. Schwyzer KZ 37 (1904): 150 pointed at σκύζουσιν (H.) and σκυδμαίνω (does this contain a root sku-*? Cf. ►σκύμνος). In view of the lack of an etymology, the word could well be Pre-Greek.

σκύλλω [v.] 'to lacerate, tear up, flay', mostly metaph. 'to pester, tire, bother, trouble, vex', med.-pass. 'to strain', aor. act. 'to infest, plunder' (pap., inscr., NT, late prose; rarely poet.: A., Nic., AP). ◁?▷
•VAR Aor. σκῦλ-αι, pass. -ῆναι (-ηθῆναι Eust.); fut. -ήσομαι, perf. med. ἔσκυλμαι. With metathesis ξύλλεσθαι if 'σκύλλεσθαι' (SIG 56, 3; Argos Vᵃ; cf. Schwyzer: 329).
•COMP Rarely with ἀπο-, ἐπι-, προ-, συν-.
•DER σκυλ-μός [m.] 'bothering, tribulation' (Hell. and late), 'rending, mangling' (sch.), -μώδης 'troublesome' (Vett. Val.). Further σκύλος [n.] (pl. σκύλα in Nic. Th. 422) 'stripped hide, skin' (Call., Theoc., AP; cf. δέρμα to δέρω), 'nutshell' (Nic.); as a first member in σκῠλο-δέψης [m.] 'tanner' (Ar.), -ός 'id.' (D.). Also σκῦλος [n.] (Herod. 3, 68 with ῡ after σκῦτος, if not a misspelling). See ► κοσκυλμάτια 'cuttings of leather'.
•ETYM Together with its derivations, σκύλλω is especially known from the later colloquial language and in the metaphorical meaning 'to pester, etc.'. Through adaptation to ►σκῦλα, the aor. σκῦλαι may have obtained the meaning 'harass, plunder' (but see s.v.). Only pres. σκύλλονται 'they are stripped of their flesh', of warriors drowned by fish (A. Pers. 577 [lyr.]), and σκῦλο-δέψης (Ar.) are attested early.

Traditionally connected with the group of ►σκάλλω (see s.v. and Pok. 923f.), where υ in σκύλλω was supposed to be a reduced vowel (Schwyzer: 351). This scenario is impossible, but Vine 1999b: 565ff. regards σκύλλω as an o-grade formation skol-i̯e/o-*.

σκῦλα [n.pl.] 'war-booty, especially weapons', also -ον 'spoil, booty' (S., E., Th. et al.). ◂PG?▸

•DER *σκυλαῖος in σκυλαίας· τὰ σκῦλα καὶ λάφυρα. οἱ δὲ τὰς πανοπλίας 'arms and (other) booty from an enemy; a hoplite's full armor' (H.). Denominative verb σκυλεύω 'to rob a slain enemy of his weapons' (Hes. Sc. 468, IA); σκυλεύματα [n.pl.] = σκῦλα (E., Th.), -εία [f.] 'plundering' (LXX), -ευσις [f.] (Cilicia), -ευμός [m.] (Eust.) 'spoils', -ευτής [m.] 'one who strips a slain enemy' (Aq.), -ευτικός 'plundering' (Tz.). Also σκυλ-άω, -ῆσαι (UPZ 6, 15; 21, AP 3, 6[?], Eust.) 'id.', -ήτρια [f.] 'she who strips a slain enemy' (Lyc., Eust.).

•ETYM The root specifically refers to the stripping of a slain enemy of his weapons and armor. Probably a derivative of the root of ►σκύλλω 'to lacerate, tear up, flay', even though the meaning of σκῦλα may have influenced the aorist σκῦλαι 'to plunder'. Other etymologies, such as comparison with σκῦτος 'prepared skin, leather' and ἐπισκύνιον 'skin of the brows' (Pok. 951 ff.), σκύλος, are less attractive. It is noteworthy that σῦλον (see on ►συλάω) has a similar meaning; does this point to a Pre-Greek interchange σ-/σκ-? Fur.: 393 connects ξύλλομαι, but see ►σκύλλω.

σκύμνος [m., f.] 'cub, whelp', especially 'young lion' (epic Ion. poet. Σ 319, also Arist. etc.). ◂PG?(S)▸ •ETYM Formation like νηφ-άλιος, etc. Has been compared with Skt. kr̥dhú- 'shortened, mutilated', á-skr̥dho-yu- 'not shortened, not needy', which is further connected with the Lithuanian group of skurstù, skurdaũ skur̃sti 'to lack, lag in growth, languish', nu-skur̃dęs 'impoverished, neglected'. These words derive from a root sker-dʰ-*. Since σκυρθ- is semantically remote and cannot reflect a zero grade, nor an o-grade, the etymology is incorrect. There is no better etymology, but Pre-Greek origin is probable (note the variant without σ-).

σκύρον [adj.] = ἄσκυρον 'St. John's wort' (Nic. Th. 74). ◂PG▸

•ETYM Perhaps the island name Σκῦρος is related (after the marble quarries?). Fur.: 366 takes the word to be a variant of ►σκῖρος and concludes that it is Pre-Greek.

σκῦτάλη [f.] 'stick, club, spar, drum' (Archil., Pi.), especially a staff used as a cypher to read dispatches, more generally also '(Spartan) dispatch'. Metaph. a snake (Nic. et al.), or a fish (Opp.), see Strömberg 1943: 36. ◂?▸

Denominative σκυτ-όομαι in ἐσκυτωμένος 'coated with leather' (Att. inscr., Plb. et al.).

•ETYM Probably related to the PIE word for 'skin' keh₁u-ti-*: with a zero grade, OHG hūt, Lat. cŭtis, and ToA kāc; with a full grade, OPr. keuto and Lith. kiáutas 'case, envelop, shell' (see, e.g., De Vaan 2008 s.v. cutis). The initial s-* of Greek may be shared by MW eskit, Co. eskit, esgis 'shoe' < ped-skuHt-*. The root *(s)keh₁u- may also have been preserved in ►ἐπισκῦνιον 'skin of the brows' and ►κύτος 'hollow (of a shield), vessel'.

σκύφος [m., n.] 'cup, mug' (ξ 112, rare in Arist., Hell. inscr., etc.). ◂PG?(V)▸

•DER Diminutive σκυφ-ίον [n.], also 'skull' (Paul. Aeg.), -ίδιον (EM?), -άριον (gloss.); adj. -(ε)ιος 'σ.-like' (Stesich.); σκύφ-ωμα [n.] = σκύφος (A. Fr. 184 = 308 M.; on the suffix, see Chantraine 1933: 186), -ών, -ῶνος [m.], meaning unclear (Gal.). σκυξιφόν· σκύφον (H.) is doubtful.

•ETYM No etymology. The form σκύφος is similar to σκάφος, -η (see ►σκάπτω), but the vocalism is unexplained. Fur.: 176 compares κύβος· ... Πάφιοι δὲ τὸ τρύβλιον 'a drinking vessel' (H.), etc., which could be a Pre-Greek variant.

σκώληξ 1, -ηκος [m.] 'worm, larva' (N 564). ◁?▷

•DER Diminutive σκωλήκ-ιον [n.] (Arist., etc.); -ίτης [m.] (κηρός or στύραξ) 'wax or resin in the shape of a worm' (Dsc.); -ώδης 'worm-like' (Arist.); -όομαι [v.] 'to be eaten away by worms', -ωσις [f.] (Thphr.); -ιάω [v.] 'to suffer from worms' (Orib. et al.), -ίασις [f.] (Sm., Thd.); -ίζω [v.] 'to have an irregular pulse' (Gal.), cf. μυρμηκίζω 'id.', σκωληκίζονται· κινοῦνται ὡς οἱ σκώληκες 'move or stir like worms' (H.).
•ETYM Usually regarded as derived from a lengthened grade formation to the root of ►σκέλος 'thigh, leg' (see there for PIE etymology) and σκολιός 'bent, twisted'. The suffix -ηκ- is also found in ►σφήξ, ►μύρμηξ, etc.; the thematic formation is perhaps found in σκώλοισι· δρεπάνοις, διὰ τὴν σκολιότητα 'scythe, after its curvedness' (H.; if this is not rather related to σκῶλος 'pole'), σκωλύπτομαι 'to curve, wind' (Nic. Th. 229), and MoGr. (Pontic) σκοῦλος 'upper shank' < *σκῶλος or *σκόλος. In view of the lengthened grade and the non-IE suffix, this analysis is dubious.

σκῶλος [m.] 'pointed pole' (N 564), 'thorn, prickle' (Ar. et al.). ◁IE?▷
•VAR Also σκῶλον, pl. -α 'id.' (EM, H.), metaph. 'stumbling block', whence -όομαι [v.] 'to be offended' (LXX; Aq., Al.).
•COMP σκωλο-βατίζω [v.] 'to walk on stilts' (Epich.), -βάτης '(kind of) weevil' (H.).
•ETYM The word resembles ►σκόλοψ 'pointed pole' and, outside Greek, Alb. hell 'spit, icicle' < skōl-o-; without s-, Lith. kuõlas 'pole' < kōl-o-* and OCS kolъ 'pole' < kol-o-. These words probably all derive from PIE kelH- 'to hew'; see Pok. 545-547 and s.v. ►κλάω. Another possible cognate is ►σκάλλω 'to split'.

σκώπτω [v.] 'to mock, jest, flout, taunt' (h.Cer. 203). ◁?▷
•VAR σκῶψαι (IA), fut. σκώψομαι (Ar.), pass. aor. σκωφθῆναι (X.), perf. ἔσκωμμαι (Luc.).

•ETYM An unexplained formation that must be recent in the prehistory of Greek. The root may be that of ►σκέπτομαι 'to look about' or ►σκάπτω 'to dig', but neither is immediately obvious. Perhaps the verb is related to ►σκώψ 'little horned owl'.

•VAR Or σκώρ, cf. Schwyzer: 377 and 384; gen. σκατός (Poll.).

•ETYM From the PIE heteroclitic sok̂-r/n-*, found in Hitt. šakkar, gen. šaknaš 'excrement', Lat. mūscerda 'mouse droppings', and ON skarn 'muck' (cf. Schindler BSL 70 (1975): 1-10 and Kloekhorst 2008 s.v. šakkar). The form σκῶρ reflects a collective sk-ōr*, while σκατός reflects quasi-PIE sk-n-to-s*. An IE word with similar formation is reflected by ►κόπρος 'excrement'.

σκωρνυφίαν [f.] = τὸ σκάνδαλον <Ἔχαρμος>, ἐν Μησίν· ἐν δὲ Τριακάσιν τὰ ὁσιώδη χρέα 'trap, stumbling-block; bony meat (if to be read as τὰ ὀστώδη κρέα)' (H.). ◁?▷

σκώψ, σκωπός [m.] 'little horned owl' (ε 66, Epich., Arist., Theoc. et al.); metaph. as a fish name (Nic. Fr. 18), probably after the colors (Strömberg 1943: 114); name of a dance (Ael., Poll.), with in the same mg. also σκώπευμα (A. Fr. 70 = 20 M.) and σκωπίας (Poll.); as a name of a dance also connected with σκοπεῖν (Ath., H.). ◁PG(V)▷ •VAR Also κώψ.
•COMP As a second member in ἀεί-σκωψ a kind of owl (Arist.), which acc. to Arist. was not a migratory bird.
•ETYM Formation as πτώξ, κλώψ, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 2), but unexplained. Connected with σκώπτω by Ath. and Ael., which is probably folk etymology. The same holds for the modern comparison with σκέπτομαι, after the sharp view and the protruding circle around the eyes. A by-form κώψ is often mentioned (see Thompson 1895 s.v. σκώψ); also, γῶπας· κολοιούς. Μακεδόνες 'jackdaw (Maced.)' (H.). Given these variations, the word is probably Pre-Greek. Other words for 'owl' are ►γλαῦξ, ►στύξ and ὦτος (s.v. ►οὖς).

σμάραγδος [f., m.] 'emerald' (Hdt., Pl., etc.). ◁LW Orient.▷
•VAR Also μάραγδος (Men., Hell. inscr.), also ζμάραγδος, -ιον (inscr., pap.).
•COMP σμαραγδο-χαίτης 'with emerald-green hair' (Tim. Pers.).
•DER σμαράγδ-ιον [n.] (M. Ant.), -ίτης [m.] (λίθος; Hell., Plin.); -ινος 'of emerald, emerald-green' (pap. et al.), -ειος 'id.' (Hld.), -ώδης (sch.); -ίζω [v.] 'to be emerald-green' (D. S., Dsc.).
•ETYM To be compared with Skt. marakata- (also marakta-) [n.] and Akk. barraqtu, Hebr. bārǽqæt 'id.', whose original source may be Semitic (cf. brq 'gleam, flicker').

For the Greek reflex σμ-, cf. Σμέρδις beside OP Bardiya, etc. (Schwyzer: 311); we also have to reckon with influence of σμαραγέω. The form μάραγδος, which is attested only later, may have been borrowed from Indic. From Greek, in turn, were borrowed Lat. smaragdus and Pers. and Arab. zumurrud, whence Osman. zümrüd was taken, which was again borrowed as Ru. izumrúd. Cf. Mayrhofer EWAia s.v.

σμαραγέω [v.] 'to drone, roar, thunder', of the sea, thunder, etc. (epic Il., also Hp. Mul. 2, 154). ◂PG(V)▸ •VAR Aor. -ῆσαι.
•COMP As a second member (directly referring to the verb) in ἐρι-σμάραγος 'droning loudly', of Ζεύς (Hes.), later also of θάλασσα, etc.; also πολυ-, βαρυ-, ἁλι-σμάραγος etc. (Opp., Nonn.). σμαραγίζω [v.] 'id.' (Hes. Th. 693), σμαράσσω (EM), μαράσσω (Erot.).
•DER σμαραγ-ή [f.] 'the droning' (Opp.), -ος [m.] name of a chthonic god (Hom. Epigr.).
•ETYM The word σμαραγέω is an onomatopoeic formation like λαλαγέω, παταγέω, σφαραγέομαι, ῥαθαγέω, etc., beside which we find λαλαγή, πάταγος, σφάραγος, ῥάθαγος, etc.; σμαράσσω is formed like e.g. πατάσσω and ῥαθάσσω. Fur.: 227 considers σφάραγος to be a variant (with interchange φ/ μ), and takes the two words to be Pre-Greek. In any case, it is unrelated to σφαραγέομαι (pace Güntert 1914: 159).

σμάρδικον [n.] · στρουθίον 'sparrow; lewd person'; σμαρδικοπῶλαι· οἱ τοὺς στρουθοὺς πωλοῦντες 'those who sell sparrows' (H.). ◂PG(V)▸ •ETYM As per Grošelj Živa Ant. 7 (1957): 228, σμάρδικον is related to ▸σμορδοῦν: συνουσιάζειν 'to keep company, have intercourse with' (H.). Fur.: 226 instead compares σπαράσιον = ὄρνεον ἐμφερὲς στρουθῷ 'bird resembling a sparrow' (H.), which would give us a typically Pre-Greek variation between π and μ. If σμορδοῦν is indeed related, the interchange α/ ο would also point to Pre-Greek origin.

σμαρίς, -ίδος [f.] name of a small fish resembling the μαινίς, 'Sparus smaris' (Epich., Arist., Opp., Marc. Sid. etc.), see Thompson 1947 s.v. ◂PG(V)▸ •ETYM Fur.: 226 convincingly compares σπάρος 'a small sea-fish, a kind of bream', which proves Pre-Greek origin for this word in view of the variation μ/ π. A connection with σμηρίζειν 'to plane' (Hero) is implausible (pace Strömberg 1943: 87), because σμαρίς generally has short ᾰ (long ᾱ only Marc. Sid.).

σμάω, σμάομαι [v.] 'to rub (off), wipe off', med. also 'to rub oneself with ointment'. ◂IE? *$smeh_1$- 'rub'▸ •VAR σμᾷ, σμᾶται (Hdt. and late); σμῇ, σμῆται (Att. com.); σμῆν (Luc.), aor. σμῆσαι, -ήσασθαι (mostly Ion. Hell. and late), Dor. ptc. σμασαμένα (Call.), perf. med. ptc. προ-εζμησμένος (pap. II^p), •COMP Also (especially act.) with ἀπο-, ἐκ-, etc.
•DER σμῆμα, Dor. (Theoc.) σμᾶμα [n.] 'cleanser, soap, ointment' (Ar. Fr. 17, Hell. and late). With a velar enlargement (Schwyzer: 702, Chantraine 1942: 330): A. σμήχω, -ομαι 'id.' (since ζ 226), aor. σμῆξαι, -ασθαι (Hp., Hell. and late), pass. σμηχθῆναι (Ar.), perf. med. ptc. ἐσμηγμένος (Dsc.), also with ἀπο-, δια- etc. Hence 1. νεό-σμηκ-τος 'newly polished' (N 342 et al.). 2. σμῆγμα = σμῆμα, with -ματώδης (Hp., late). 3. σμῆξις (ἀπό-) [f.] 'the rubbing off, cleaning' (Str., Dsc. et al.). 4. σμήκ-της [m.] 'one who rubs off' (gloss.); -τρίς [f.] 'kind of fuller's earth' (Hp., com.), -τικός 'cleaning' (medic.). B. σμώχω 'to bray, grind' (Ar., Nic.), aor. σμῶξαι, perhaps after σώχω, ψώχω.

•ETYM Etymology uncertain. Possibly related to Lat. macula [f.] 'stain, blot' (from smH-$tlā$; see De Vaan 2008 s.v.). In any event, it is unrelated to Go. bi-, ga-smeitan, OHG smīzan, etc. Although one would first think of reconstructing a root *$smeh_2$-, LIV² s.v. *$smeh_1$- follows DELG in taking the α-forms as secondary, and deriving the verb from *$smeh_1$- instead. The preservation of initial *sm- in some Greek words is problematic. See also on ▸σμῶδιξ and ▸σμώνη.

σμερδαλέος [adj.] 'terrible, frightening, fearsome', of appearance, cry and shouting (epic Il.). ◂?▸
•VAR σμερδνος 'id.' (Il., h. Hom., A. Pr. 355, Nic.).
•ETYM σμερδαλέος can be compared with λευγαλέος, ἀργαλέος etc.; σμερδνός is formed like e.g. δεινός. The pair σμερδαλέος : σμερδνός shows an interchange of suffixes like in ἰσχαλέος : ἰσχνός, etc.; see Benveniste 1935: 45f. A corresponding s-stem (like in θαρσαλέος : θάρσος) is found in σμέρδ[ν]ος· λῆμα, ῥώμη, δύναμις, ὅρμημα 'will, vigor, power, impulse' and εὐσμερδής· εὔρωστος 'robust, strong' (H.), for the meaning of which cf. δεινότης, also 'power, force, dexterity'.
The word σμερδαλέος is traditionally connected with OHG smerzan, OE smeortan 'to hurt' and OE smeart 'painful', MoE smart 'biting, stinging, sharp, witty, elegant'. However, the Germanic word may rather be related to Lat. mordeō 'to bite', and within Greek ἀμέρδω 'to deprive of' (thus LIV² s.v. *h_2merd-). In this case, σμερδ- has no etymology, unless we assume that PIE *h_2merd- interchanged with *smerd- (on the problem, see Beekes 1969: 84). Cf. also ▸σμορδοῦν.

•ETYM The formation can be compared with ἔθνος, κτῆνος, ἔρνος, τέμενος etc.; the original meaning was probably 'swarm (of bees)' rather than 'beehive'. The etymology of σμῆνος is unknown. Fur.: 376 compares ἰσμῆναι· θῆκαι, ἀκόλουθοι

'cases, followers' (H., see Latte); although this does not yet prove that the word is of Pre-Greek origin, it is nevertheless is a good possibility (pace DELG, which assumes IE origin without argumentation).

•ETYM Doubtful analysis of σμῖλη as an instrument noun in -λη (like μήλη, χηλή, τρώγλη, etc.) in Chantraine 1933: 240. On the assumption that the long ῑ of σμῖλη was introduced secondarily on the model of the nouns in -ῑλη, -ῑλο-, the word has been connected with the Germanic word for 'carpenter, smith', ON smið, OE smiþ (> MoE smith), OHG smid, from PGm. smiþu-, smiðu- < IE smi-tu*. However, this etymology is shaky; cf. the initial reflex of sm-*. Alternatively, Pre-Greek origin might be considered. Cf. ►σμινύη, ►σμίνθος, and ►μῖκρός.

•ETYM A Mysian word, according to sch. A 39, but in any case Pre-Greek or Anatolian (cf. Chantraine 1933: 371 and Schwyzer: 510). It may be somehow connected with Etr. isminϑians, an epithet of Mars (Kretschmer Glotta 20 (1932): 221, Kretschmer Glotta 30 (1943): 133). The form σμίς· μῦς (H.) was probably invented on the basis of actually attested σμῦς (a cross with μῦς), to follow the alphabetical order.

•ETYM An instrument name, comparable in its formation to σιπύη, ὀστρύη, ὀφρύη, etc., σμῐνύη is generally considered to be a verbal abstract in -νυ(ᾱ) from a root smei-* 'cut', which was thought to be attested in ►σμίλη. However, the etymology of σμίλη is uncertain, and it is perhaps Pre-Greek. Accordingly, we should be careful in deriving σμῐνύη from such a root, and consider Pre-Greek origin for this word as well.

Both glosses derive from a noun *σμόρδος of unknown meaning, identified by Specht KZ 62 (1935): 215 with Lith. smárdas, Ru. smórod, etc. 'bad smell, stench', from IE smordo-*, Lith. smirdė́ti 'to stink' with zero grade. von Blumenthal 1930: 45 compared σμερδαλέος, assuming IE smerd-* 'rub'.

However, cf. ►σμάρδικον, which could point to a Pre-Greek word if we understand it as 'lewd person'.

σμυγερός [adj.] 'painful, toilsome, miserable' vel sim. (A. R.; perhaps S. Ph. 166 for στυγερός). ◅PG?(V)▻ •DER ἐπι-σμύγερος, adv. -ῶς 'id.' (Od., Hes. Sc. 264, A. R.), perhaps with ἐπι- after ἐπί-πονος.
•ETYM It is meaningless to assume an expressive contamination, e.g. from μογερός and στυγερός. Attempt at a morphological explanation by Strömberg 1946: 90.
Fur.: 363 compares μόγος and σμογερόν· σκληρόν, ἐπίβουλον, μοχθηρόν (H.), as well as σμυγερόν· ἐπίπονον, οἰκτρόν, μοχθηρόν, πονηρόν, ἐπίβουλον, ἀνιαρόν, χαλεπόν (H.). This would show that the word is Pre-Greek.

σμύλη [f.] name of a fish (Alex. Trall., Gp.). ◅?▻

σμύρις, -ιδος, -εως [f.] 'emery-powder for abrading and polishing' (Dsc., late medic.). ◅PG(V)▻ •VAR Also σμίρις.
•DER σμιρίτης λίθος [m.] (LXX), σμιριεῖα [n.pl.] (spelled ζμιρριεια) 'emery-powder' (Imbros II[a]).
•ETYM Compared with ►μύρον and with a Germano-Celtic word for 'grease, fat' in OHG smero, OIr. smi(u)r, etc.; this is semantically not very convincing, as the Greek word denotes a highly specific substance. Moreover, the frequent variant with ι remains hard to understand (it is not due to vowel assimilation). Acc. to von Blumenthal 1930: 45, it belongs to σμάω, σμῆν, and Frisk asks if σμύρις could be due to the influence of μύρον. Fur.: 366 takes the variation υ/ι as proof of Pre-Greek origin, which is the most likely option.

σμύρνη [f.] 'myrrh' (Hdt., Arist.). ◅GR▻
•VAR σμύρνᾰ (Hp., Arist., Thphr., etc.; cf. Solmsen 1909: 254), also ζμύρνα (Hyp., inscr., pap.), gen. σμύρνης (S., E. et al.).
•COMP ζμυρνό-μελαν (-ανον, -άνιον), -ανος [n.] 'mixture of myrrh and ink' (PMag.), ἀλυκό-σμυρνα [f.] 'kind of myrrh' (Hippiatr.).

•ETYM Probably a back-formation from Σμυρναία (μύρρα) "the Smyrnaean"; cf. Heubeck Beitr. z. Namenforsch. 1 (1949): 272f. with criticism of the interpretation that σμύρνα is a by-form of μύρρα.

σμῡ́χω [v.] 'to cause to carbonize, be slowly consumed in a fire, smolder away', med. 'to carbonize, smolder'; on the use in Homer, see Graz 1965: 250ff. ◅IE? smeug^(h)-* 'smoke'▻ •VAR Aor. σμῦξαι (epic since Il., late prose), pass. σμυχθῆναι (Theoc.), quite uncertain ἀποσμυγέντες (Luc. D Mort. 6, 3; see Pisani RILomb. 73:2 (1939-40): 31ff.), perf. κατεσμυγμένη (Hld.).
•COMP Also with κατα-, ὑπο- et al.
•ETYM Formation like τρύχω, ψύχω; the late form ἀποσμυγέντες, if it belongs here at all (see above), is an analogical formation (cf. Schwyzer: 760).
Beside the primary verb σμύχω, we find a noun in Arm. mux, gen. mxoy 'smoke'. In Celtic, OIr. múch, MW mwg 'fire' may go back to IE muk-*. In Germanic, there is a primary verb with a diphthong and a root-final IE voiced stop, e.g. OE smēocan 'to smoke, fumigate' < IE smeug-*, beside the zero grade smoca [m.] 'smoke' < IE smug-on-*, smocian 'to smoke'. An Indo-European reconstruction for all these forms is difficult, as a voiceless aspirate $k^h$ (PIE (s)mūk^ho-; Meillet MSL 8 (1894): 294, followed by Frisk) is not reconstructed anymore for PIE.
Lith. smáugti, 1sg. smáugiu 'to strangle, string together, plague' should probably be explained differently (Fraenkel 1955 s.v.), while for Ru. smúglyj 'dark, brown' etc., other interpretations are possible (Vasmer 1953 s.v.).

σμῶδιξ [f.] 'bloodshot bruise, bloody weal' (B 267, Ψ 716, Opp. H. 2, 428). ◅PG(V)▻ •VAR Plur. -ιγγες. Also μῶδιξ· φλέψ, φλυκτίς 'blood vessel, boil' (H.).
•DER σμωδικὰ φάρμακα (Gal.).
•ETYM The derivation from a noun *σμωδ(ο)-, and further connection with σμῆν, σμώχω 'to rub', still maintained by Frisk, is formally and semantically unconvincing. It is rather a Pre-Greek word; note the suffix -ιγγ- and initial σ-/ zero (Fur.: 279f.).

σμώνη [f.] 'gust of wind' (Hdn. Gr., H. [cod. σμωσή, alphabetically misplaced], EM). ◅?▻

σοβαρός 'blowing along violently' (of the wind etc.), usually 'haughty, proud' (Att.), probably from σοβέω after the numerous adj. in -αρός, with fem. σοβάς, -άδος 'insolent, capricious' (Eup., Ph.), 'kind of dance' (Ath.); also Σόβοι = Σάτυροι (Ulp.).

•ETYM Probably from tu̯óro-*, an old agent noun belonging to a verbal root 'to seize, enclose, etc.' in Lith. tvérti, 1sg. tveriù 'to enclose, fence in, grasp', also 'to form, build'. The word σόρος is formally identical with Ru. tvor 'creature, form, shape' (to tvoritь 'to create, do, build'); cf. also Lith. āptvaras 'fence' (to ap-tvérti). See ►σειρά.

•ETYM Expressive formation in -άσσω like ταράσσω, τινάσσω, πατάσσω, and others, without a certain etymology. If -άσσω is only an enlargement, the word could be connected with σπαίρω, etc. Others have regarded the velar as part of the root (-σσω is analogical for –ζω, according to Debrunner IF 21 (1907): 224), connecting σπαράσσω with Lat. spargō, ON spark [n.] 'kick', and Gr. σπαργάω, σφαραγέομαι, inter alia. Yet this would not explain the second α of σπαράσσω. Persson 1912(1): 418 has compared Arm. p'ert' 'torn off piece' (-rt' < -rkt-), ON spjǫrr [f.] 'strip of cloth' < PGm. sperrō*. Yet another conjecture was put forward by Thierfelder (apud Frisk): derivation from σπάω on the model of ταράσσω, ἀράσσω, χαράσσω, etc.

•DER Diminutive σπαρτίον [n.], also as a plant name (Att., Hell.), -ινος 'made of σ.' (Cratin., Poll.), -ίνη [f.] 'rope, cable' (Ael.).
•ETYM Appears to be a verbal noun in -το- with a zero grade root. Although a basic verb derived from sper-* / spr-* is not attested in Greek, it has been supposed on account of the γ-enlargement in *σπάργω, σπάρξαι 'to envelop', and also of σπεῖρα, σπυρίς. Comparison with Arm. p'arem, p'arim 'to enclose, embrace' poses phonetic difficulties (p' cannot come from PIE sp-*). Borrowed as Lat. spartum 'Spanish broom'.

σπατάγγης, -ου [m.] 'kind of sea urchin' (Sophr. 102, Ar. Fr. 409, Arist.). ◂PG(V)▸ •VAR πάταγγας [acc.pl.] 'id.' (Poll.). Note also φατάγγης 'pangolin' (Ael.) (Fur.: 111[58], 164, 281; not in LSJ).
•DER σπαταγγίζειν· ταράσσειν 'to agitate' (H.).
•ETYM Unexplained. Hardly related to σπάω 'to suck' (cf. on σπατάλη). The variation shows that the word is Pre-Greek.

σπᾰτάλη [f.] 'lavish, lascivious way of life, debauchery, luxury', also of luxurious objects, 'adornment, bracelet, anklet' (LXX, Hell. inscr., AP, etc.). ◂PG(V)▸ •DER Diminutive Lat. spatalium [n.] 'bracelet' (Juba apud Plin., inscr.). Denominative verb σπαταλάω (κατα-) 'to live lavishly, lasciviously' (Plb., LXX, NT etc.), aor. -ῆσαι; thence -ημα [n.] (AP). Backformation σπαταλός (-αλος) 'lavish, lascivious' (AP etc.).
•ETYM If originally an abstract, σπατάλη may semantically be compared with κραιπάλη, δαιταλεύς; further connections are uncertain. Perhaps from σπάω 'to draw in, suck', of wine, etc.; e.g. ἔσπασεν ἄμυστιν ἑλκύσας (E. Cyc. 417); cf. also σπάσει πίνειν (Arist.). On the -τ-, cf. σπατίζει· … ἕλκει (H.). To be rejected is the explanation by Neumann 1961: 88f., viz. that σπαταλός is a loanword from Hitt. išpatalla-* 'who gladly and often eats to the full'. Fur.: 154, 179 convincingly connects βάταλος 'lascivious man', so the word is Pre-Greek.

σπατῖλη [f.] 1. 'thin excrement' (Hp., Ar. Pax 48, D.C.); σπατίλουροι· οἱ τὴν οὐρὰν εἰς τὴν σπατίλην ἐκτιθέντες 'secreting urine into ordure' (H.); unclear σπατιλοκολυμφευ (Sophr.) (PSI 11, 1214 d 4). 2. 'leather waste' (sch. Ar. l.c.). ◂PG?▸
•VAR Also πατίλη (An. Ox.).

•DER Also παστίλη = ἡ τελευταία ἡμέρα τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ 'the last day of the year' (Hdn. Gr. 1, 322, 19).
•ETYM In the second meaning, it belongs to ►σπάτος. The meaning 'thin excrement' may also be combined with 'leather waste' as a euphemistic metaphor (to which the phonetic similarity with τῖλος, τιλάω may have contributed). However, since Meillet MSL 13 (1905-1906): 291f., the word has usually been connected with οἰσπώτη.

•COMP Very often with prefix in different shades of meaning, e.g. ἀνα-, ἀπο-, δια-, ἐπι-, κατα-, περι-.
•DER A. From the unenlarged root: 1. σπάσις, mostly to prefixed verbs, e.g. ἀνάσπασις (to ἀνα-σπάσαι, -σπᾶν) 'pulling in', etc. (Hp., Arist., etc.). 2. σπασμός (ἐπισπασμός, etc.) [m.] 'wincing, spasm, violent movement' (IA), whence σπασμώδης, κατασπασμικός. 3. σπάσμα (ἀπόσπασμα, etc.) [n.] 'spasm, sprain, shred, scrap' (IA); 4. -σπαστος in ἐπίσπαστος 'brought upon oneself, incurred' (Od. etc.); σπαστικός (κατα-, περι-) 'pulling in, slurping in' (Arist.). 5. -σπαστήρ, -ῆρος [m.] in ἐπισπαστήρ (Hdt., AP; -σπατήρ inscr.), ποτισπαστήρ (Epid. IV-III^a) "attractor", 'thong which draws the door, bird string, net'; ἐπίσπαστρον [n.] 'id.' (LXX, D. S. etc.).
B. With δ-enlargement: 1. παρασπάς, -άδος [f.] 'shoot torn off and planted' (Thphr.), ἀπο- 'twig torn off' (AP, Nonn.). 2. σπάδῖξ, -ῖκος [m.] '(torn off) twig, especially a palm twig' (Nic., Plu., etc.). 2. σπάδιον [n.] 'race-track' (Argos, H; "the lenghty one"; cf. στάδιον). 3. σπαδών, -όνος [f.] 'spasm, convulsion' (Hp., Nic.), whence -ονίζω, -ονισμός. 4. σπάδων, -ωνος [m.] 'eunuch' (LXX, Plb. etc.), also σπάδος (Eust.).
C. With τ-enlargement: σπάτος [n.] '(removed) skin' (H., sch. Ar. Pax 48 [Boeot.]), σπάτειος in σπατείων· δερματίνων 'leathern' (H.), as a first member in Σ<πα>τοληασταί [m.pl.] guild of fullers in Argos (Roman era).
D. Derived verbs: σπάζει· σκυζᾷ. Ἀχαιοί (H.); σπαδίξας aor.ptc. of σπαδίζω 'to remove' (Hdt. 5, 25); σπατίζει· τῶν <σ>πατέων ἕλκει, τῶν δερμάτων, τῶν τιτθῶν (H.).
•ETYM Klingenschmitt 1982: 132 has connected Greek σπάω with Arm. hanem 'to pull out', if from a pres. *$pā$-n-, built secondarily from the aorist. García-Ramón fthc. now suggests that it is cognate with Ved. pā-, ud-pipīte 'rises against' and Hitt. pippa-^{i} / pipp-, and reconstructs *(s)peh_2- 'to draw, set in motion (violently)'. The Greek verb may have been derived from the aor. σπασ(σ)α- or from *sph_2-eie/o-. Thence, the whole tense system developed within Greek. Adams 1999: 368 still considers plausible the suggestion by van Windekens that ToB pāss- 'to rip off (the skin)' continues *peh_2-s-. See ►σπάθη.

σπεῖρα [f.] 'twist, coil', for instance of a snake; 'network, spiral'; designation of several round or circular objects, e.g. 'rope, belt, bead, round base of a pillar' (Ion. poet., also Hell. and late prose; v.l. ζ 269); also as a military term = Lat. manipulus (Hell.), see Debrunner IF 48 (1930): 244; later = cohors (inscr. and pap., *Act. Denominative verb σπειρ-άομαι 'to convolve' (Hell. and late), also with περι-, etc.; older συ-σπειράομαι 'to wind, pull together' (Pl., X., Arist., etc.), also act. συ-, περι-σπειράω 'to wind, pull together' (Hell. pap., D. S. et al.); hence σπείρ-ᾱμα, Ion. -ημα [n.] 'twist, coil, for instance of a snake, band, etc.' (A., Arist., Nic., etc.), see further Chantraine 1933: 184). Also (συ-)σπειρόομαι 'to wind (together)' (Hp., Thphr.), act. aor. σπειρῶσαι 'to swathe' (Call.), from σπεῖρον?

Uncertain is the appurtenance of σπειρία [n.pl.] 'garments' (X. HG 4, 5, 4; rather σείρια with Dindorf). Denominative aor. σπειρῶσαι = σπαργανῶσαι 'to swathe' (Call.), if not from ►σπεῖρα.

Hence the diminutive σπερ-μάτιον [n.] (Thphr., etc.), -ματίας (σικυός) [m.] 'seed bearer' (Cratin.), -ματίτης, -ματῖτις 'bearing, bringing forth seed' (late), -ματικός 'seminal' (Arist., etc.), -ματώδης 'seed-like' (late); σπερμαίνω [v.] 'to sow, bring forth' (Hes., Call., Plu. et al.), σπερ-ματίζω [v.] 'to sow, bear seed', -ματίζομαι [v.] 'to

With an o-grade of the root we find the following derivatives: σπόρος [m.] 'seed, sowing' (Att.), -ιμος 'fit for sowing', τὰ -α 'sowing fields' (X., Thphr., LXX et al.). σπορά [f.] 'sowing, seed, procreation, descent' (trag., Pl., Thphr. et al.), -αῖος 'sown' (Babr.); often with prefix, e.g. διασπορά [f.] 'dispersal, exile' (LXX, Ph., Plu. et al.). From σπόρος or σπορά: ὁμό-σπορος 'of the same seed, kindred' (poet. h. Cer.); σπορ-εύς (κατα-, δια-) [m.] 'sower, begetter' (X., pap. et al.). σπορητός [m.] 'sowing, seed' (A., X., Thphr.), after ἀλοητός, ἄμητος, etc.; σποράς, -άδος 'dispersed' (IA), αἱ Σποράδες group of islands, with -άδην 'dispersed' (Att., etc.), -αδικός 'id.' (Arist.), -άσαι [aor.] 'to disperse' (inscr.). ἐπισπορ-ίη [f.] 'second sowing' (Hes.), ἐπίσπορος (A.); περισπόρ-ια [n.pl.] 'suburbs' (LXX).

The zero grade of the root is found in the following derivatives: σπαρ-τός 'sown' (A. et al.); οἱ Σπαρτοί [m.pl.] lit. 'the sown ones', of the dragon seed of Cadmos (Pi. et al.); see also ► σπαρνός.

•ETYM An obsolete group of words, which seems to have lived on only in the learned and poetic language. The authors were obviously no longer certain about the meaning (cf. Lith. spìsti, 1sg.pres. spintù 'to begin to swarm (of bees), to gather' < spit-* is probably not related, in view of the different dental. The word ►σπάω is not related.

•DER σπινθ-ηρίζω 'to sparkle, cause sparks' (Thphr., Plu.), ἀπο- 'id.' (Arist.), -ισμοί (H. and Suid.). Also σπινθαρίδες [pl.] (h. Ap.), -άρυγες [pl.] (A. R.), σπίνθραξ, -ᾰκος [m.] (Sext. Ca.) 'id.'.

On the bird names σπινθαρίς = Lat. spin-turnix see Thompson 1895 and WH s.v.

•ETYM For σπινθήρ, cf. ἀστήρ 'star', αἰθήρ 'ether'; σπίνθραξ, like ἄνθραξ 'charcoal'; σπινθαρ-ίδες, like ἐσχάρ-α 'fireplace'; σπινθάρυγ-ες, like μαρμαρυγ-αί 'sparklings'. Reminiscent of Lith. spindžiù, spindėti, Latv. spîdêt, spīdêt 'to gleam, beam' < spn̥d-*, Latv. spuôdrs 'white, gleaming' < spond-ro-, but formally impossible to connect. The Baltic words reflect a root spend-, without -i-* and with root-final -d-* because of the acute accentuation. On the attempt by Niedermann IF 26 (1909): 58f. to connect Lat. scintilla with σπινθήρ from a Mediterranean form stint*ʰ-, see further Pariente Emerita 20 (1952): 394ff.

•DER σπλην-ίον [n.], -ίσκον [n.], -ίσκος [m.], -άριον [n.] 'compress' (Hp., Dsc., Samos IVᵃ); -ίον also as a name of several plants (Dsc.; cf. ἄσπληνον). σπλην-ίτης, fem. -ῖτις 'belonging to the spleen, disease of the spleen' (medic.); σπλην-ικός 'belonging to the spleen, splenetic' (Hp., Hell. com., etc.), -ώδης 'id.' Furthermore σπλάγχνα [n.pl.] 'interior organs (heart, liver, lungs, kidneys), intestines' (Il.), sing. rarely also secondarily as designations of individual organs (A., Pl., Arist.), metaphorically (plur. and sing.) 'heart' = 'mental state' (trag.), 'compassion, commiseration, charity' (LXX, NT).
In compounds, e.g. σπλαγχνο-φάγος 'eating intestines' (LXX), εὔ-σπλαγχνος 'having healthy intestines' (Hp.), 'compassionate' (LXX, NT), σπλαγχν-ίδια [n.pl.] diminutive (Diph.), -ίδης (UPZ 89, 3 and 13; form and mg. doubtful, cf. •ETYM An n-stem is found in other names of body parts, like φρήν, ἀδήν, αὐχήν, etc., but these all inflect with root ablaut. Several IE subfamilies show similar words for 'spleen', but the differences between them are too substantial to be able to reconstruct a single IE word for 'spleen'. We find Lat. liēn 'spleen' (< lihēn* < (sp)lihēn*) < (s)liǵʰ-ēn-*; CS slězena 'spleen' < s(p)lēǵʰ-n-* or s(p)leh₁ǵʰ-n-*; MBret. felch 'spleen' < spelǵʰ-*; Skt. plīhán-, Av. spərəzan- < (s)plh₁ǵʰ-n-*. It is probable that Arm. pʿaycaɫn is somehow related, as well.
The exact reconstruction of the Greek forms is unclear. We should start from *σπληχ-, *σπλαχ- (= Av. spərəz-an-), an n-stem like Lat. liēn, etc. Anticipation of the nasal gives σπλαγχν-. The form σπλήν may have arisen haplologically for σπληχ-ήν (after monosyllabic φρήν), or is it from splēngʰ? On σπλήν and σπλάγχνα, see further Egli 1954: 44ff. and Schwyzer: 489¹. Borrowed as Lat. splēn (>> MoE spleen, etc.).

•ETYM Fur.: 154 convincingly connects ἄσβολος 'soot, dust of coals' and *σπολός in σπολεύς (according to Frisk s.v. σπολάς, wrong for *σποδεύς). The word would then be Pre-Greek.

σπολάς, -άδος [f.] 'leather harness, jerkin' (S. Fr. 11, Ar., X.). ◄PG(V)► •ETYM A formation in -άς from a verbal noun *σπόλος or *σπολή. Related to ►ἀσπάλαξ? Perhaps from a verb for 'split, tear off' (IE *spel-), in which case it may be related to σπόλια· τὰ παρατιλλόμενα ἐρίδια ἀπὸ τῶν σκελῶν τῶν προβάτων 'wool plucked off the legs of sheep', ἄσπαλον· σκῦτος 'skin, hide' (H.), but hardly to Thess. σπόλος 'pole' (IG 9(2), p. XI [II[a]]), if = 'split wood'. The word σπολεύς 'kind of bread' (Philet. apud Ath. 3, 114e) may belong here, or be mistaken for σποδεύς (see ►σποδός).
From other languages: Lat. spolium 'skin, hide; arms, spoils' (= σπόλια), Lith. spãlis 'beard (= part of the stalk of flax)', pl. spãliai 'parts of the stalk', OCS polъ 'sex, half', MoHG spalten 'to cleave', Go. spilda 'writing tablet', all reflecting a root *spel(H)- 'what is split, stripped off' (see also LIV[2] s.v., but Skt. phalati 'to burst' is probably unrelated). Cf. further ►στέλλω and ►ψαλίς. If Lat. spolium can be a loan from Greek, the Greek forms may also reflect the Pre-Greek root that is also seen in ἄσπαλον 'mole'.

•DER σπέργουλος (also π-)· ὀρνιθάριον ἄγριον 'small wild bird' and σπαράσιον· ὄρνεον ἐμφερὲς στρουθῷ 'bird resembling a sparrow' (H.). Also στρουθὸς πυργίτης 'house-sparrow' (Gal.).
•ETYM The word σπorγ-ίλος is formed like ὀρχίλος, τροχίλος, and other bird names; σπέργουλος is dialectal for *σπεργ-ύλος, like κηρύλος, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 249 and 251). The forms with -γ- have a counterpart in Germanic and Baltic: MHG sperke, OPr. spurglis, spergle- 'sparrow-', which may point to a European substrate word or a Wanderwort. See also Thompson 1895 s.v. Cf. also ►ψάρ and ►σπαράσιον.

Also σπόρθυγγες· αἱ συνεστραμμέναι μετὰ ῥύπου τρίχες 'hair matted with filth' and σπορθύγγια· τρίβολα 'water-chestnut'. τὰ διαχωρή<μα>τα τῶν αἰγῶν, ἅ τινες σπυράδας καλοῦσιν 'excrement of goats' (H.). Note also σπύρδαρα 'dung' (Poll. 5, 91).
•ETYM For the formation of σπύραθοι, cf. (σ)πέλεθος 'dung', ὄνθος 'id.', ψάμαθοι 'grains of sand'; σπυράδες is like λιθάδες 'stones', ἰσχάδες 'dried figs', etc.

Similar words are found in Lith. spìros [f.pl.] 'droppings of goats, hares, and other small animals' < *sprH-, MoIc. sparð [n.] 'droppings', sperðill [m.] 'kind of sausage' < *sporH-to-, but they can only be related if Greek σπυρ-/ σφυρ- reflects earlier *sporh₂-. The Greek alternations in (σ)π/φυρ-αθ/δ- could very well point to Pre-Greek origin.

•ETYM The word σπυρ-ίς is formed like σκαφίς 'bowl', etc., either from a noun (*σπυρός vel sim.) or directly from a verb. It is hardly related to σπάρτον 'rope, cable' via a meaning *'twine', as the variation σπ-/σφ- shows that the word is Pre-Greek. Fur.: 241 further compares σύριχος (Alex.), σύρισσος (Poll.), σύρισκος (H.), ὑριχός (Ar.), ὕρισχος (Phryn.), ὑρίσκος (H.), ὑρίσσος (H.), all 'twined basket', if from *σϝύριχος.

στάδιον [n.] 'racecourse, stadium', secondarily also a measure of varying length, in Hdt. 2, 149 = 100 ὀργυιαί or 6 πλέθρα (Thgn., Pi., IA). ◄?►
•VAR Plur. -ια and -ιοι (scil. δρόμοι).

•DER σταδι-εύς [m.] 'racer' (Plb. et al.), -εύω 'to run for the wager' (Arist. et al.), -αῖος 'measuring one σ.' (Plb., D. H. et al.), -ασμός [m.] 'measuring by stadia' (Str. et al.).
•ETYM Perhaps an original folk-etymological transformation of σπάδιον (Argiv.; see ►σπάω), after στάδιος? Bechtel 1921, 2: 473 assumes that στάδιον is original and that σπάδιον arose through dissimilation. Borrowed as Lat. stadium 'race-course'.

στάδιος [adj.] 'upright, standing still, firm, immobile, lying on the balance = weighed, etc.' (Il., Pi., Hell. and late epic, D. •ETYM Adjectival derivative from the adverb στά-δην 'in standing posture' with the suffixes -ιο- and -αιο-, like ἐκτάδ-ιος from ἐκτά-δην (from ἐκ-τείνω); see Chantraine 1933: 39 and Schwyzer: 467 and 626. See ►ἵστημι.

σταγ-ετός [m.] 'id.' (Aq.), like ὑετός, etc.; σταγ-μα (ἐπί-) [n.] 'the dripping, drop, aromatic oil' (A., Gal., pap. et al.), ἐπι-, κατα-σταγμός [m.] 'dripping of the nose, sniffing' (late medic.). στάξις (ἀπό-κατά-) [f.] 'the dripping', especially of blood from the nose (Hp., Gal.). στακτός 'dripping' (IA), -τή [f.] 'myrrh oil' (Antiph., Plb. et al.), -τά [n.pl.] 'resins' (medic.); ἔνστακτον [n.] 'the dripping in' (Gal.); στα<κ>τικόν· πεμμάτιον πλακουντοειδές. ἄλλοι δὲ ἀγγεῖα διυλίζοντα Νειλῶον ὕδωρ 'small cake; vessels filtering water from the Nile' (H.). ἐπι-στάκτης [m.] 'woolen thread for oil-dripping' (late medic.); στακτερία (for -τηρία) [f.] 'bottle for myrrh oil' (pap. •ETYM The present στάζω reflects *σταγ-ιω and forms the basis of the other forms. The form στάγες is probably a backformation from σταγόνες (Schwyzer: 424). Often connected to Lat. stāgnum 'standing water, pool' and OBret. staer 'river, brook' < stag-rā*. The semantics of this etymology are not obvious, but the connection remains possible.

•ETYM Formation like βαθμός, θεθμός, ῥυθμός, etc. A derivative of the root of ►ἵστημι, PIE steh*$_2$-, with the suffixes -θ- and -μο-. The suffix -θ- also appears in εὐ-σταθής 'standing firm, quiet' (Ion. Hell. and late since Il.), which was probably built on the aor. ἐστάθην (Risch 1937: 82). The synonymous and later attested form σταθερός (A. Fr. 276 = 479 M., etc.) may have been built from φανερός (or a similar example) under the influence of ἀ-φανής.

•ETYM The connection with the IE word for 'dough' in SCr. tȉjesto 'dough', OIr. táis 'id.' < th*$_2$eis-to-, OHG theismo 'leaven' is semantically appealing. If related, the anlaut must have been influenced by στέαρ 'fat' (Pedersen 1909: 56). See also ► τήκω.

•ETYM Formation like παλάσσω, ῥαθάσσω, αἱμάσσω; the form σταλάω is metrically conditioned (after χαλάω, etc.), to which belongs σταλεηδόνες· σταλαγμοί (H.), perhaps metrical for σταλεδ- or στα-ληδ-?
The form σταλάσσω is an enlargement of στάζω. Usually derived from a root (s)tel(h*$_2$)- 'to drip' (see LIV^2 s.v. stelh*$_2$ḱ-), whence also ►τέλμα 'puddle' and MoE stale 'urine' are derived. This seems possible, but is not very convincing in view of the limited distribution, the vague semantics, and the s-mobile. See further on ►ἀνασταλύζω.

•DER στάλιδας (-ίδας?)· τοὺς κάμακας ἢ χάρακας 'vine-props or -poles, pointed stakes' (H.), σταλίδων (X. Cyn. 2, 8 codd.; σχαλίδων Steph.).
•ETYM The suffix alternation recalls κλᾱϊκ-, from κληῑδ- 'bolt, key' (cf. s.v. ►κλείς); see Schwyzer: 496. Further analysis uncertain; the root could be that of either ►στέλλω or ►ἵστημι (with a suffix -λ-).

•DER Several diminutives: σταμν-ίον, -άριον [n.], -ίσκος [m.] (com., Hell. and late). PN Σταμνίας [m.] (Ar.). Denominative verb: σταμν-ίζω, only with κατα- and συν-, 'to pour into a jar, transfuse' (Thphr., Nic. et al.).
•ETYM Formation like ἐρυμνός (from ἔρυμα), λίμνη (from λιμήν), etc. (see Schwyzer: 524 and Chantraine 1933: 215). Probably from a noun *στᾶμα, *σταμήν or the like, 'stand, standing place'; the jar would thus be a large, standing one. Probably related to στάτος [m.] (substantivized from στατός) 'big jug' (Hell. inscr., H.), OHG stanta 'jug to be put somewhere', Lith. statìnė 'barrel, cask'. A zero grade μ-derivation is also supposed in ►σταμῖνες; comparable formations in other languages are ToB stām, A ṣtām 'tree' (cf. stäm- 'to stand'), OHG stam, gen. stammes 'stem', which may reflect PGm. stamna-* (IE sth_2-mn-o-). Cf. also ►στήμων. Borrowed as Alb. shtâmbë, shtëmbë [f.] 'bottle' (Mann Lang. 17 (1941): 23). Fur.: 227, 245 compares στάφος 'trough' with variation μ/φ; uncertain.

στάσις [f.] 'standing, standing still, stand, location, position, political opinion, party, division' also 'placement, weighing, defrayal' (Alc., Thgn., Pi., IA), on the mg. see Bolling AmJPh. 82 (1961): 162f. ◄IE $steh_2$- 'stand', sth_2-ti-► •COMP στασί-αρχος [m.] 'party leader' (A. et al.), ξενό-στασις 'inn for strangers' (S.). Often with prefix as a derivation of prefixed verbs, e.g. ἀνάστα-σις (to ἀν-ίσταμαι, -ίστημι) 'standing up, removal, making to stand up, expulsion' (IA).
•DER στάσ-ιμος 'standing (firm or still), quiet, weighable' (IA), 'stilling, blocking' (Hp.). Also -ιώδης 'partial, rebellious' (X., Arist. et al.), -ιώτης [m.] 'party member' (IA), hence -ιωτικός, -ιωτεία (after πατριώτης, στρατιώτης, etc.); στασ-ιάζω 'to form parties, divide, quarrel' (IA), also with prefix, e.g. ἀντι-, δια-; στασ-ίζω 'id.' (Crete III[a]).

•ETYM Old verbal noun sth_2-ti- of ►ἵστημι 'to stand', identical with Skt. sthíti- [f.] 'stand, standstill', Lat. statiō 'standing place', frozen accus. statim 'fixed, on the spot', Go. staþs [m.] 'position, place', OHG stat [f.] 'id.'. From the full grade $steh_2$-ti-: Av. stāiti- 'standing, stand, position', Latv. stātis [pl.] 'turning point (of the sun)', and Ru. stat' 'build of the body'.

στατήρ, -ῆρος [m.] designation of a weight and of a coin, 'stater' (IA). ◄IE $steh_2$- 'stand'► •VAR στατῆρες is also the opposite of ἀποδοτῆρες 'returners' (Epich. 116), acc. to Et. Gen. = χρεῶσται 'debtors', cf. ὀβολο-στατήρ (Hdn. Gr.) = ὀβολο-στάτης 'obol weigher, usurer' (Ar. et al.).
•COMP Thematicized in bahuvrīhi compounds: δεκα-στάτηρ-ος 'concerning ten σ.' (Arr.), -ον [n.] 'sum or weight of ten σ.' (Att. and Cret. inscr.).
•DER στατηρ-ίσκος (-ισμός?) type of tax (pap.), -ιαῖος 'worth or weighing one σ.' (Theopomp. Com., Hell. and late).
•ETYM Derived from ἵστημι in the sense 'to put on the balance, weigh off'. See also Benveniste 1948: 50. Similar, but independent, formations are found in Lat. Stator, -ōris epithet of Jupiter, Skt. sthā́tar- [m.] 'driver of a car' < $steh_2$-ter-. Borrowed as Lat. statēr. See ►ἵστημι.

στατιών [f., m.] 'station'. ◄LW Lat.►
•DER -άριος (inscr.).
•ETYM From Lat. statiō; see Drew-Bear Glotta 50 (1972): 93.

στατός [adj.] 'standing (still)', of a horse (Z 506 = O 263), of water (S. Ph. 716 [lyr.]); Hell. of jars 'made or fit for standing' (Delos, pap.); subst. στάτος [m.] 'vessel' (Delos, Oropos, H.), with στάτιον [n.] 'id.' (Delos II[a]). ◄IE $steh_2$- 'stand'► •DER στατ-ικός 'belonging to weighing' (Pl.), on the mg. cf. ►στάσις; 'standing still' (Arist.), 'stilling' (Hell. and late); στατ-ίζω, -ίζομαι 'to stand, set, establish' (S., E. et al.).
•ETYM Old verbal adjective of ►ἵστημι 'to stand'.

σταυρός [m.] 'pole' (Ω 453), 'cross' (D. S., NT et al.). ◄IE $steh_2$-u- 'pole'► •DER σταυρ-ίον [n.] (Theognost.), -ικός 'belonging to the cross' (Tz.); σταυρ-όω 'to provide with poles' (Hdt., Th., etc.), 'to crucify' (Plb., NT et al.), also with ἀνα-, etc.; thence -ωμα [n.] 'fraise, palisade' (Th., X. et al.), -ωσις [f.] 'impalement, crucifixion' (Th. et al.), -ώσιμος 'belonging to the crucifixion' (Christ. lit.).
•ETYM Identical to ON staurr [m.] 'pole' < $steh_2$u-ro-, which is probably also the basis of Lat. instaurāre 'to renew, restore' (whence restaurāre 'id.'). See further on ►στοά, ►στῦλος, ►στύραξ, and ►στύω.

σταφυλή [f.] 'grape' (Il.), metaphorically 'swollen uvula, uvula inflammation' (Hp., Arist., etc.), also σταφύλη (accent after κοτύλη, κανθύλη?) 'lead in the balance, plummet of a level' (B 765). ◄PG(V)►

•COMP E.g. σταφυλο-τομέω 'to cut off grapes; to perform surgery on the uvula' (late), ἐρι-στάφυλος 'with big grapes' (Od., epic).
•DER Diminutive σταφυλ-ίς, -ίδος [f.] (Theoc., Hp.), -ιον [n.] (M. Ant., pap.); -ῖνος [m.] 'carrot' (Hp., Dsc.), metaphorically as the name of an insect (Arist.), see Strömberg 1937: 52; -ίτης [m.] epithet of Dionysus (Ael.); -ωμα [n.] name of an eye-disease (medic.), after γλαύκωμα, etc. From σταφύλη: σταφυλίζειν· τὸ συνι<σ>άζειν τὰς ὤας τοῦ ἱματίου 'to ?? the fringes of the mantle' (H.). PN Στάφυλος [m.].
•ETYM Probably the zero grade form of ►στέμφυλα. The similarity with ►ἀσταφίς 'dried grapes' is probably not accidental, but the exact relation of the words is unknown. The group of words is Pre-Greek (cf. Chantraine 1933: 251, Schwyzer: 485, and Fur.: 342, 373). It has been argued that σταφυλῖνος 'carrot' is not related to σταφυλή (Greppin Glotta 64 (1986): 248-252, Hansen KZ 102 (1989): 211). The latter argues that the meaning 'carrot' comes from Sanskrit sta(m)bh- with stambha- 'post, pillar, column', so that it was 'the pillar plant', or 'the plant with the pillar root'.

•ETYM Formation like τρυτάνη and other instument nouns. Perhaps as a technical expression from ►στάχυς 'ear', due to some specification of the meaning, but more likely a Pre-Greek substrate word.

στάχυς, -υος [m.] 'ear (of corn)' (Ψ 598), metaphorically 'offshoot' (poet.), as a plant name (Dsc. et al.), 'surgical bandage' (medic.). ◅PG(V)▻ •VAR -ῦς (E. HF 5), -ῦν (Call., A. R.).
•COMP σταχυο-βολέω 'to put forth ears' (Thphr.), πολύ-σταχυς 'rich in ears' (Theoc., Str.).
•DER σταχυ-ηρός 'bearing ears' (Thphr.), -ώδης 'ear-like, full of ears' (Thphr., Nonn.), -ϊνος 'of ears' (Olympia), -ῖτις [f.] (also -ίτης [m.]) plant name (Ps.-Dsc.), -όομαι 'to develop into an ear' (Dsc.).
•ETYM Traditionally connected with ON stinga, OE stingan 'to sting', nominal OHG stanga [f.] 'stick, pole, bar', MHG stunge 'prickle', Lith. stangùs 'stiff, fixed', stangà [f.] 'effort', sténgti 'to be able', stìngti 'to harden', Latv. stiñgt 'id.'. The Germanic words reflect $steng^h$-u-, of which στάχυς would be a zero grade $stng^h$-u-. The appurtenance of the Baltic forms is doubtful, since their accentuation seems to require a reconstruction steng-*, in which case they cannot be related. However, the variant ►ἄσταχυς (see s.v. and Kretschmer Glotta 21 (1933): 89) rather suggests that the Greek word is of substrate origin (see also Fur.: 373). Cf. ►στόνυξ and ►στόχος.

στέαρ, στέατος [n.] '(standing) fat, tallow' (the opposite of ►πιμελή), also 'dough' = σταῖς (Od., Hp., X., Arist., etc.). ◅IE steh$_2$-ur*▻ •VAR στέᾱρ (com., see LSJ Supp.), στῆρ, στῆτος (Hell. pap. et al.).
•DER Diminutive στεάτ-ιον [n.] (Alex., Paul. Aeg.), -ώδης 'tallowy' (Hp., Arist. et al.), -ινος 'of tallow, of dough' (Aesop.), -ωμα [n.] 'tallow formation, fat tumor', hence -ωμάτιον [n.] (medic.), -ῖται πλακοῦντες 'flat cakes' (H.) as a gloss to πίονες; στεατ-όομαι [v.] 'to be tallowed' (LXX), 'to suffer from a fat tumor' (Hippiatr.); also στε-άζω 'to tallow' (Al.).

•ETYM The word στέᾱρ < στῆ-ϝαρ < PGr. stā-u̯r̥. A heteroclitic noun like πῖαρ, οὖθαρ, etc. (Schwyzer: 518, Benveniste 1935: 19, 27 and 169), from steh$_2$-* 'to stand'; see ►ἵστημι. No exact correspondences outside Greek. The words ►σταῖς 'dough' and ἀγχιστῖνος (s.v. ►ἄγχι) are unrelated.

•VAR Also aor. στέξαι (Plb. et al.), στεχθῆναι (VI^{p}).
•COMP Also with ἀπο-, etc. Further in στέγ-αρχος [m.] 'housemaster' (Hdt. et al.); often as a second element, e.g. in ὑπό-στεγος 'under a roof, covered' (Emp., Pl., S. et al.).
•DER στεγ-νός 'covered, waterproof, clogged' (Ion., E., X., etc.), hence -νότης [f.] 'thickness, stoppage' (Hp.), -νόω (ἀπο-, etc.) 'to thicken, stop', -νωσις [f.], -νωτικός (Hell. and lat). Substantivized στέγνη, Dor. Aeol. -α [f.] 'roof, cope, covered place, house, room' (Alc., Gortyn, IA). Also στεγ-ανός 'covering, watertight' (Att.), -ανότης [f.] (Eust.), -ανόω 'to cover' (Hell. and late), -ανώματα· τὰ ἐν τοῖς τοίχοις, οἱ λεγόμενοι σύνδεσμοι 'things in the walls of a house, the so-called bonds' (H.); -άνη [f.] 'cover' (AP); -ανίσαι (cod. -ῆ-)· στέγη ὑποδεχθῆναι 'be received in a room' (H.). Furthermore στεκτικός 'for keeping the water out' (Pl., etc.), στέγωσις [f.] (to an unattested *στεγόω) 'the roofing' (pap. III^{p}), cf. στέγ-νωσις, -ασ(σ)ις.
στέγος [n.] 'roof, house' (trag., also Hell. and late prose); in compounds adapted to στέγω (cf. Schwyzer 513): οὐρανο-στεγής 'bearing the sky' (A. Fr. 312 = 619 M.). Derivations from στέγη (στέγος): στεγ-ύλλιον [n.] 'hut' = 'workshop' (Herod.); -ῖτις [f.] = πόρνη (Poll., H.); στεγ-άζω, -άσαι 'to cover, roof' (IA), also with ἀπο-, κατα-, etc.; thence -ασ(σ)ις, -αξις (ἀπο-) [f.] 'covering' (Epid., Delos IV-II^{a}, etc.), see Schwyzer: 271, Chantraine 1933: 281), -ασμα (ἀπο-, κατα-, προ-) [n.] 'cover, cope' (Pl., X., etc.), -αστήρ [m.] 'coverer, tile' (Poll., H. as a gloss on σωλήν), -αστρίς [f.] 'covering, cope' (Hdt. et al.), -αστρον [n.] 'covering, cope, container' (A., Antiph., etc.).
Also τέγος [n.] = στέγος (Od.; not in trag.), hence τέγ-εοι (θάλαμοι Z 248, δόμοι Emp. 142) mg. not quite clear: 'under a roof' (= 'upstairs'), 'roofed'; cf. S. Schmid 1950: 39; τεγ-ίδιον [n.] designation of a garment for women (Tanagra and pap. III^{a}); also τέγη [f.] = τέγος (Vett. Val., H.).
•ETYM The form στέγω is a primary thematic present; non-present forms are late and rare. It derives from PIE (s)teg-* with s-mobile (see LIV^2 s.v.), attested in the Latin thematic present tegō 'to cover', perf. tēxī, and in OIr. teg, gen.sg. tige 'house' < tegos-* [n.], OHG dah, ON þak [n.] 'roof' < togo-*, OPr. stogis, Lith. stógas [m.] < stogo-* with Winter's Law. Skt. sthagati (Dhatup.), sthagayati 'to cover, conceal' are unrelated (Kuiper 1954: 249). Borrowed as Lat. stega 'cover' (from στέγη), segestre, -rum, tegestrum 'cover made of skin' (from στέγαστρον).

στείβω [v.] 'to tread (on something), densify by treading, trod, trample' (Λ 534, Υ 499, epic poet.). ◅IE steib-* 'get stiff, fix'▻

•VAR Only pres. except aor. κατ-έστειψας (S. OC 467; not quite certain), verbal adj. στιπτός (v.l. -ει-) 'trodden solid, solid, hard' (S., Ar.), ἄ-στιπτος 'untrodden' (S.; also OGI 606?).
•COMP Rarely with prefix, e.g. ἐπι-, κατα-.
•DER στοιβή [f.] 'stuffing, cushion, bulge, etc.'; often as a plant name 'Poterium spinosum', the leaves of which were used for stuffing (Hp., Ar., Arist., Epid. [IV[a]], etc.), στοιβ-ίον 'id.' (Dawkins JHS 56 (1936): 10), -άς = στιβάς, -ηδόν 'crammed' (comm. Arist.), στοιβ-άζω 'to fill, stuff' (Hdt., LXX et al.), rarely with δια-, whence -αστός, -αστής, -ασις, -άσιμος, -ασία (Hell. and late).
Zero grade of the root in: στίβος [m.] '(trodden) road, path, footstep, trail' (epic Ion. poet. since h. Merc.), 'fuller's workshop' (pap. III[a]), whence στιβάς, -άδος [f.] 'bed of straw, reed or leaves, mattress, bed, grave' (IA), -άδιον [n.] 'id'. (Hell. and late), -αδεύω 'to use like straw' (Dsc.). Further στιβεύς [m.] 'hound' (Opp.), 'fuller' (pap.), = ὁδευτής (H.), -εύω 'to track' (D. S., Plu., H.), = πορεύεσθαι (H.) with -εία [f.] 'tracking, etc.' (D. S. et al.), -εῖον [n.] 'fuller's workshop' (pap.), -ευτής [m.] 'hound' (Sostrat. apud Stob.); also -ίη = -εία (Opp.; metrically conditioned). στιβική [f.] 'fuller's tax' (pap. III[a]); στιβάζω 'to enter, track, etc.', -ασις [f.] (late); ἐστίβηται [perf.pass.] 'has been tracked' (S. Aj. 874; to στιβέω or -άω); ἄ-στιβ-ος 'unentered' (AP), often -ής 'id.' (A., S., also X. et al.), -ητος 'id.' (Lyc. et al.; cf. ἐστίβηται); Στίβων name of a dog (X. Cyn.).
στιβαρός 'solid, compact, massive, strong' (Il., epic poet., also Hell. and late prose); like βριαρός, etc.; -αρηδόν [adv.] 'compact' (late).
With a long vowel we find στῖβη [f.] 'ripe' (Od., Call.), -ήεις (Call.); on the mg., cf. πάγος, πάχνη to ►πήγνυμι.
•ETYM Related to Arm. stēp, gen. -oy 'frequent, incessant, permanent' (adj. and adv.), with stip-em 'to press, urge', -aw, -ov 'quick, diligent(ly)' < PIE stoibo-* or steibo-*. Perhaps also related to Lith. stíebas 'mast(tree), pillar, stalk', stáibis 'lower shank, supporting post', if the accent, which points to root-final -b-, is old. Similar words with root-final -p- in other Indo-European languages resemble the Greek root: Lat. stīpāre 'to compress, surround' (sometimes connected to the Corinth. PN Στίπων, IG 4, 319); Lith. stìpti, 1sg. stimpù 'to stiffen, grow rigid', stiprùs 'strong', stiẽpti 'to stretch'; OE stīf, MHG stīf 'stiff, erect' < steifa-*, MLG stīvele 'support', ON stífla 'to dam'. With -bʰ-*, we find CS stьblo 'stem, stalk', Latv. stiba 'staff, rod' and, within Greek, στῖφος, with a mg. that resembles that of στείβω. The exact relation between the roots steib-/*steibʰ-/steip- is uncertain.

στεῖρα 1 [adj.] 'infertile', of cows, goats, women, also metaph. (Od., Hp., Hell. and late), 'virginal' (Lyc., Luc.). ◄IE ster-ih₂* 'infertile'► •VAR Secondary στεῖρος (E. Andr. 711 as v.l. to στερρός), εὐνούχους στείρους (Man.), κατάστειρος (Vett. Val.), cf. κάτ-ισχνος, etc.
•DER στειρ-ώδης '(looking) infertile' (Hp.), στειρ-όομαι, [v.] 'to become infertile' (LXX, Phld., Ph. et al.), with -ωσις, -ωτικός; -εύω [v.] 'to be infertile' (Gal.).

•ETYM Formation like πίειρα, χίμαιρα, μοῖρα, etc. (Schwyzer: 494, Chantraine 1933: 98). An old term for an infertile animal, also used for infertile women. Similar formations are reflected in Arm. sterǰ 'infertile' < ster-i̯-* (cf. anurǰ beside ὄνειρος) and Skt. starī́- 'infertile cow'< ster-ih₂*. Further cognates are Lat. sterilis 'infertile', with -ilis from gracilis, fertilis, etc. (Leumann Glotta 42 (1964): 118), Go. stairo [f.] 'infertile woman', Alb. shtjerrë 'young cow, lamb'. •ETYM An old feminine formation (cf. especially semantically close πρῷρα), beside ►στερεός 'stiff, hard'; thus perhaps originally denoting the "hard, solid part" vel sim.? The word may be identical to ►στεῖρα 1 'infertile'.

•VAR στίχω (Hdt. 3, 14; conjecture in S. Ant. 1129 ex H.), them. aor. στιχεῖν (sigm. aor. περί-στειξας δ 277).
•COMP With prefix, e.g., ἀπο-, δια-, ἐπι-, προσ-. As a second element e.g. in μονό-στιχος 'consisting of one verse' (Plu.), as -στοιχος in e.g. τρί-στοιχος 'consisting of three rows' (μ 91), -εί [adv.] 'in three rows' (K 473), μετα-στοιχεί mg. unclear (Ψ 358 and 757); σύ-στοιχος 'belonging to the same row, coordinated, corresponding' (Arist., etc.).
•DER From this, probably deverbative, comes στιχάομαι 'id.' in 3pl.ipf. ἐστιχόωντο (Il., Theoc., Nonn.), also with περι-, συν-; pres. στιχόωνται (Orph.), act. στιχόωσι, ptc. ntr.pl. -όωντα (Hell. and late epic); ὁμοστιχάει [3sg.pres.] 'escorted' (O 635), from *ὁμό-στιχος or for ὁμοῦ στ.?
Nominal derivations: A. στίχες [f.pl.], στιχός [gen.sg.] 'rank(s), file(s)', especially of soldiers, 'battle array, line of battle' (epic poet. since Il.).
B. στίχος [m.] 'file, rank', of soldiers, trees, etc., often of words, 'line' in verse and prose (Att., etc.). στιχ-άς [f.] 'id.' only in dat.pl. στιχάδεσσι (Epigr.). Diminutive -ίδιον (Plu.); -άριον 'coat, tightly fitting garment' (pap.). Adjectives in -ινος, -ικός, -ήρης and -ηρός, adv. -ηδόν (late). Hence στιχ-ίζω [v.] 'to arrange in rows' (LXX; v.l. στοιχ-), -ιστής, -ισμός (Tz.); περιστιχίζω 'to surround' (A.), also περιστοιχίζω 'to fence in all around with nets (net-poles), to ensnare' (D., Plb., etc.).
C. στοῖχος [m.] 'file or column of soldiers, choir members, ships, etc., layer of building stones, row of trees, poles, etc.' (IA), hence στοιχ-άς [f.] 'arranged in rows', of ἐλᾶαι (Sol. apud Poll. et al.), -άδες (νῆσοι) name of a group of islands near Massilia (A. R., etc.); here also the plant name στοιχάς (Orph., Dsc.) and -αδίτης οἶνος 'wine spiced with σ.' (Dsc.). Cult names of Zeus and Athena: -αῖος (Thera), -αδεύς (Sikyon), -εία (Epid.), referring to the arrangement in phylai. Further adjectives in -ιαῖος 'measuring one row' (Att. inscr.), -ικός (late); adverb -ηδόν (Arist., etc.), -ηδίς (Theognost.) 'line by line'. Verbal derivations: στοιχ-έω 'to form a row, to stand in file and rank, to match, agree, be content, follow' (X., Att. inscr., Arist. Hell. and late), also with περι-, συν- etc., hardly deverbative in view of the mg.; -στοιχούντως 'matching, consequent' (Galatia, Aug. time). στοιχ-ίζω 'to arrange in a line, order' (A. Pr. 484 and 232, X. et al.), often with περι-, also δια- and κατα-; thence -ισμός (Poll.).

D. στοιχεῖον, often plur. -εῖα [n.] 'letters in free-standing, alphabetical form' (of γράμματα: 'character, script'), also 'principles; component, element' (Pl., Arist., etc.), 'heavenly bodies, elementary spirits, natural demons, magic means' (late and Byz.); also 'shadow-line' as a measure of time (Att. com.), cf. σκιὰ ἀντίστοιχος (E. Andr. 745); the original meaning is 'object in a row' vel sim. (on the formation cf. σημεῖον, μνημεῖον, ἐλεγεῖον, etc.); on the development of the mg., which is in many ways unclear, see Burkert Phil. 103 (1959): 167ff. with references. στοιχει-ώδης 'belonging to the στοιχεῖα, elementary' (Arist., etc.), of barley 'in several rows' as opposed to ἄ-στοιχος πυρός (Thphr.), so either the same as στοιχ-ώδης or a misspelling of it. στοιχει-όω [v.] 'to introduce to the principles' (Chrysipp. et al.), 'to equip with magical powers, charm' (Byz.), also -ωσις, -ωμα, -ωτής, -ωτικός (Epicur., Phld. et al.), -ωματικός (Ps.-Ptol.), see Mugler 1958-1959: 380f.

•ETYM The full grade thematic present στείχω agrees exactly with Go. steigan 'to go up', OIr. tiagu 'to stride, go' < IE stéigʰ-*. στόλος [m.] 'rostrum' (Pi., trag.), 'outgrowth, stump, appendage' (Arist.), if not related to στόλος 'equipment', see s.v. ▸στέλλω.

•ETYM For the formation of στελεά, cf. δωρεά, γενεά, and for -εός, -εόν, cf. κολ-εός, -εόν; στειλ-ειή is like ἀρ-ειή, νευρ-ειή (στειλ- may be due to metrical lengthening; see Schwyzer: 469³, Risch 1937: 131, and Chantraine 1933: 51 and 91). For στέλεχος, which may also be a metrical variant, cf. τέμαχος, etc. (Schwyzer: 496, Chantraine 1933: 403).

Both στελεά, -εός, -εόν, and στέλεχος are based on an unknown, probably nominal basis, perhaps an s-stem στέλος* (Schulze 1892: 175), which may be related to Arm. stełn, pl. stełun-kʿ 'stem, shaft, stalk, twig' and to OE stela [m.] 'stalk of a plant', ON stjǫl 'stalk' < stel-*; see further s.v. ▸στέλλω and ▸στήλη.

στέλλω, -ομαι [v.] 'to put in order, make ready; to equip or dress with weapons, clothes, etc.; to prepare (for a journey), dispatch'; also 'to furl, take in the sails, tie up, constrain'; med. especially 'to summon, fetch, prepare (for a journey), set off' (also act. intr.), also 'to put on (clothes)' (Il.). ◂IE stel-* 'put in order'; also spel-* 'split'?▸

•DER στόλος [m.] 'equipment (of a campaign), campaign by water and by land, fleet, army, troop, legion, march' (Pi., IA). στολή [f.] 'armor', usually 'dress, garment' (IA), 'obstruction, pressure, constraint' (Epicur., medic.), on Aeol. σπόλα cf. below; also ἀπο-, δια- ἐπι-στολή etc. (to ἀπο-στέλλω) 'sending, extension, mission, letter' (IA, etc.), with ἀποστολ-εύς [m.] 'official for equipping and dispatching the fleet' (Att.), etc., see Boßhardt 1942: 53f.

From στολή derive the diminutive στόλ-ιον [n.] (Delos IIᵃ, AP et al.), στολ-άς [f.] 'jacket' (Ael.); στολ-ίς [f.] 'dress', plur. 'folds' (E., Arist., etc.), further -ίδιον, -ιδώδης, -ιδόομαι, -ίδωμα, -ιδωτός.

From στολή and στόλος: στολ-ίζω [v.] 'to put in order, equip, dress' (Hes. Op. 628, E., Hell. and late), also with κατα-, συν-, ὑπο-; thence -ισις, -ισμα, ισμός, -ιστής, -ιστήριον, -ιστεία; στολ-άζομαι [v.] 'to dress' in ἐστολάδαντο (metrical inscr. Marathon IIᵖ; cf. Schwyzer: 672). στολμός [m.] 'equipment, clothing' (A., E.). στέλμα· στέφος, στέμμα 'crown, wreath, garland' (H.); στελμονίαι· ζώματα 'loin-cloths' (H.) (= X. Cyr. 6, 1); cf. ἁρμονία, etc. ἐπί-, διά-, ἀπό-σταλμα [n.] 'public mission, etc.' (Thphr., pap.). διασταλ-μός [m.] 'assessment' (pap. VIᵖ). στάλ-σις [f.] 'obstruction' (Gal.), διά-στάλ-σις 'destination, treaty' (LXX). ἀνα-, δια-, περι-, etc. -σταλτικός (late).

•ETYM A few attestations, at least some of which appear to be Aeolic, show initial σπ-: σπελλάμεναι· στειλάμεναι; σπολεῖσα· σταλεῖσα; εὔσπολον· εὐείμονα, εὐσταλέα; κασπέλλει (cod. -έλη)· στορνύει (all H.); σπόλα = στολή (Sapph.); κασπολέω (-σπελ-?)· ὑποστορέσω (Sapph., H.). This has been taken to indicate that IA στελ-, Aeol. σπελ- reflects PIE skʷel-. Bechtel 1921, 1: 125f. (cf. Hamm 1957: 15³) proposes that the PIE roots stel-* 'send' and skʷel-* 'equip' merged in IA, but the evidence for a root sk*^{w}el- is very meager. The forms σπόλα and εὔσπολος may instead reflect PIE spel-* 'split' (see ► σπολάς).

A PIE root stel-* is attested in Arm. stełc-anem, aor. stełc-i [v.] 'to prepare, create' (with unexplained c), Alb. shtiell [v.] 'to wind up, reel up, collect' < PIE stel-n-*, OCS po-stьlati, 1sg. po-steljǫ 'to spread', OPr. stallīt 'to stand'; see LIV^2 s.v. stel-* and Derksen 2008 s.v. stьlati*. Perhaps PGm. staljan- 'to put, etc.' (in G stellen and cognates) is related as well, but it may also be a denominative from PGm. stalla-* 'place, etc.', which could derive from sth*$_2$-d^{h}lo- instead.

•ETYM Unknown. The gloss is doubted by DELG. The suffix -υπ- may indicate Pre-Greek origin (cf. Pre-Greek, suffixes).

στέμβω [v.] = κινῶ συνεχῶς (EM), 'to shake ceaselessly' (A. Fr. 440 = 635 M., also EM et al. as an explanation of ἀστεμφής), 'to abuse, vilify' (Eust.). ◂PG?(V)▸ •VAR Enlarged στεμβάζειν· λοιδορεῖν, χλευάζειν 'to revile, jeer at' (H.), -άξαι· ὑβρίσαι 'run riot' (EM), -άσεις· λοιδιρίαι 'railers' (H.); ἀστέμβακτον (κλέος, Euph.) = ἀκίνητον ἢ βέβαιον ἢ τετιμημένον 'motionless or immovable, firm, honored' (Et. Gud.); unclear ἀστέμβακτα τιμωρουμένη (Lyc. 1117); also ἀστεμβής· ἀθαμβής, ἀτάραχος 'fearless, calm' (H.).
•DER στόβος· λοιδορία, ὄνειδος 'jeering, reproach' (Lyc., H.), στοβάζειν· κακολογεῖν 'to slander', -ασμάτων· λοιδοριῶν 'jeering' (H.), (ἐπι-)στοβέω 'to mock, taunt' (A. R., Epic. anon., EM).
With aspirate: ἀστεμφής = ἀμετακίνητος (H.), 'unshakable, firm' (epic Il.). On ► στέμφῦλα [n.pl.] 'squeezed olives or grapes, mass of olives or grapes' (IA), see s.v. στόμφος [m.] 'bombastic, high-flown speech' (Longin.), -ᾶξ, -ᾶκος [m.] 'bombastic speaker, loud-mouth' (Ar. Nu. 1367; from Aesch.), -άζω [v.] 'to speak bombastically, talk big' (Ar. et al.), also -ασμός, -αστικός (Eust.); στομφ-όω 'id.' (Phld.), -ώδης, -ός (sch.). στόμβος = βαρύηχος, βαρύφθογγος 'deep-voiced' (Hp. apud Gal.).
•ETYM The word στέμβω preserves the meaning 'to push violently, shake ceaselessly'. This yielded 'to maltreat, revile, ridicule' in στέμβω, -άζω, στόβος, and -έω. Hence the meaning of στόμφος, -αξ, etc.
Possibly related to the Germanic deverbatives OHG stampfōn, MLD stampen, OSw. stampa, etc. 'to smash' < PGm. stamp-* < PIE stomb-*. The Greek forms without a nasal may point to a nasal present. For the forms with an aspirate, influence of ► στέφω 'to honor' has been assumed. More plausibly, the variants with and without a nasal and the variants with an aspirate could be interpreted as evidence for Pre-Greek origin. See ► ἀστεμφής.

στέμφυλον [n.] mass of olives from which the oil has been pressed (Ar.). ◂PG?(V)▸

•ETYM A full grade variant of ► σταφυλή 'grape'. No further etymology; perhaps Pre-Greek, if the -μ- is interpreted as prenasalization.

•VAR Ion. στεινός, Aeol. (gramm.) στέννος.
•COMP Often as a first member, e.g. στενωπός, see ► ὀπή.
•DER στενό-της (Ion. -ει-) [f.] 'narrowness, tightness' (IA); back-formation στεῖνος (epic Il.) for στένος (A. Eu. 521 [lyr.]) [n.] 'narrowness, narrow room, throng, distress'.
Denominative verbs: στείνομαι 'to be narrowed, crowd, be crowded' (epic Il.), rarely with ἐν-, ἀμφι, περι-, a back-formation with only present and ipf. forms. Act. στείνω 'to narrow, crowd' (Nonn., Orph.) is rare and late. στενόομαι (-ει-), 'to become narrow' (Hell. and late), also -όω 'to make narrow', often with ἀπο-; thence -ωσις, -ωμα, -ωτικός (late.). στενυγρός 'narrow' (Ion.) with στενυγρῶσαι [aor.] 'to contract' (Hp. apud Gal.); TN Στενύ-κληρος 'narrow piece of land' (Hdt. 9, 64). Probably also στάνει· <σ>τείνεται, συμβέβυσται 'to become narrow, cram' (H.), with unclear root vocalism.
•ETYM The alternation στενός : στεινός : στέννος (and also Att. στεν(ϝ)ό-τερος, -τατος instead of -ώ-) points to PGr. *στενϝός, a thematic enlargement of the u-stem στενυ- continued in στενυ-γρός and Στενύ-κληρος (Chantraine 1933: 122).
No cognates outside Greek are known. Cf. Chantraine 1933: 226, Fur.: 226 ("nicht sicher erklärt"), and DELG ("L'étymologie de ce groupe de mots reste obscure."). The form στενυγρός may have a Pre-Greek suffix (see Pre-Greek, Suffixes under γρ: ταναγρίς, βάλαγρος, γήλιγρος).

στένω [v.] 'to moan, drone, groan, lament', also trans. 'to mourn, bewail' (Il., epic poet., also late prose). ◂IE *(s)ten- 'groan'▸ •VAR Rarely med. -ομαι, only pres. and ipf.
•COMP Also with prefix, e.g. ἀνα-, ἐπι-, μετα-, ὑπο-. Compounds e.g. ἀγά-στονος 'moaning loudly, roaring' (Od. et al.).
•DER A number of root enlargements is found, part of which is metrically conditioned (Schwyzer: 105, 736; Chantraine 1942: 112): στεν-άζω, aor. -άξαι, fut. -άξω, also with ἀνα-, ἐπι-, etc. (poet., also Hdt., D., LXX, Plu.); στεν-άχω, -άχομαι, -αχέω, -αχῆσαι, -αχίζω, -αχίζομαι, also with ἀνα-, ἐπι-, περι-, etc. (mostly epic Il.), all meaning 'to sigh, groan'; on these formations see Schwyzer: 702, Chantraine 1942: 330.
The following words derive from στένω: Στέν-τωρ [m.] PN (E 785; Benveniste 1948: 54). στόνος [m.] 'moaning, etc.' (Il., epic poet.); στονό-εις (στονόϝεσαν [f.sg.] Corc. VI^a) 'full of moaning, causing moaning, woeful' (Il., epic poet.).
From στενάζω: στεναγ-μός [m.] 'the moaning, sighing (Pi., trag., Pl.), -μώδης (Paul. Aeg.); -μα [n.] 'id.' (S., E., Ar.), -ματώδης (Gal.).
From στενάχω: στοναχή [f.] 'id.' (epic poet. Il.), verb στοναχέω, -αχῆσαι, -αχίζω, also with ἐπι-, παρα-, etc. (epic poet. Il.), further, often as a v.l., στεναχέω, -αχίζω.
•ETYM The full-grade thematic στένω agrees exactly with Skt. stanati 'to drone, thunder', Lith. 1sg. stenù, OE stenan 'to moan, groan' < PIE sten-*. A yod-present is reflected in OCS stenjǫ, and with zero grade in OE stunian, ON stynja 'id.'. Further, Skt. stan reflects an athem. ipf. < PIE sten-t*.

Perhaps related s-less forms are attested in Aeol. τέννει· στένει, βρύχεται 'groans, roars' (H.), possibly < *ten(h_2)-ie/o- (as per Pinault 1982: 267), Skt. tanyati 'to sound loudly, thunder' < *t(e)n-ie/o-, OE þunian 'to sound, resound' < *tn-ie/o-, OE þunor 'thunder', Lat. tonere 'to thunder'.

•DER στέργ-ηθρον [n.] 'love potion, love herb' as a plant name (Dsc.), see Strömberg 1940: 92 and 147, 'love' (A., E.); -ημα [n.] 'love charm' (S.); στοργή [f.] 'affection, love' (Emp., Antipho, rarely Hell. and late).

•ETYM Possibly related to OCS strěšti, strěgǫ 'to guard, tend', but the *-t- of the Slavic forms may be secondary in view of Lith. sérgėti 'to watch over, guard', in which case the Greek form cannot be related. Sometimes also connected to OIr. serc, MW serch 'love', MBret. serch 'concubine' < PIE *sterk-eh_2, but the different velar poses a problem.

στερεός [adj.] 'stiff, hard, firm, tenacious, steady, solid, normal', also of money and measures (Il.), 'cubic' (see Mugler 1958-1959: 378f.), rarely 'infertile' (E., Arist.). ◂IE? *ster- 'stiff, fixed'▸

•VAR Att. also στερρός.

•COMP As a first member in στερεο-μετρ-ία [f.] 'the measuring of cubic bodies, stereometry' (Pl. Epin., Arist. et al.).

•DER στερε-ότης (-ρρ-) [f.] 'hardness, firmness', also 'infertility' (Pl., Arist., etc.); στερε-όομαι (-ρρ-), -όω [v.] 'to become, make firm, hard, to harden' (Hp., X., Arist.), also with ἀπο-, κατα-; thence στερέ-ωμα [n.] 'firmness, solid component, firmament' (Hp., Arist., etc.), -ωσις [f.] 'to harden' (LXX, Str. et al.), -ωματίζω, -ωτικός, -ωτής. Enlarged στερέ-ϊνος 'hard' (pap. I^p), after πέτρινος, ξύλινος, etc.; στέριφος 'hard, firm, infertile' (Att., Arist., etc.), hence στεριφ-ότης (sch.), -όομαι [v.] 'to solidify' (Ph.), -ώματα [n.pl.] 'solid foundation', -ευομένη· παρθενευομένη 'brought up as a maiden' (H.), στερέμνιος 'hard, firm, solid' (Pl. Epin., Epicur., Phld. et al.), -ιώδης (Porph.), -ιόομαι (Zeno).

•ETYM The word στερεός, whence Att. στερρός (Scheller 1951: 114; differently Forbes Glotta 36 (1958): 269f.), probably reflects *στερεϝός, a formation which agrees with ἐτε(ϝ)ός, κενε(ϝ)ός, etc. Leumann Glotta 42 (1964): 118 derives στεριφος 'unfertile' from the root of στεῖρα, enlarged with the suffix -φο- that designates animal names (cf. ἔριφος, ἔλαφος, etc.), with a semantic change from 'infertile' to 'hard'.

The formations above are based on the IE root *ster-, attested in e.g. OHG stara-blint 'blind', OHG starēn 'to stare', MoHG starr 'rigid'; ToB ścire 'harsh' < *ster- and ToA ṣtare 'effort' < *storo-. The words ►στεῖρα 1 'infertile' and ►στεῖρα 2 'stem' also belong here. Numerous further words may belong to the same family, with various formations and different enlargements: ►στέρφος, ►στρηνής, ►στόρθυγξ, ►στηρίζω, ►στριφνός.

στέρνον [n.] 'breast, chest', in Hom. always of the chest, also as a seat of emotions, 'heart' (Il., poet., also medic.). ◂IE *$sterh_3$- 'spread out', *ster(h_3)-no-▸

•VAR Often plur. -α.

•COMP εὐρύ-στερνος 'with a wide chest' (Hes. et al.), στερνο-τυπής 'beating the chest' (E. [lyr.]), πρό-στερνος 'in front of the chest' (A.), to which προστερν-ίδιον [n.] 'harness (of horses)' (X. et al.), also στερνίδιον 'id.' (late).

•DER Verbal derivations from hypostases or univerbations, e.g., ὑποστερν-ίζομαι 'to fix under the chest' (Plu.); ὑπόστερνον· ὑπογάστριον 'paunch' (H.). Further derivations are rare: στερνίτιδες· πλευραί 'sides (of a person, animal)' (Poll.), στέρνιξ· ἐντεριώνη 'inmost part' (H.), like μόλιξ, ῥῆνιξ, etc.; unclear is στέρνιον 'meat that is difficult to digest', cf. LSJ s.v.

•ETYM Related to OHG stirna [f.] 'forehead' < *ster(h_3)-n-ieh_2 and Ru. storoná 'region, side' < PIE *stor(h_3)-n-eh_2. The root is probably that of ►στόρνυμι, i.e. *$sterh_3$-. One might, however, also consider a reconstruction *ster-no- from the root *ster- 'lay down' without a laryngeal, reflected in Skt. str̥ṇóti 'lay down, destroy'; see Narten MSS 22 (1967): 57-66, LIV^2 s.v. *ster- and s.v. ►στρατός. The latter reconstruction has the advantage that it would account for the absence of a reflex of a laryngeal in στέρνον. However, the semantics seem to favor the former reconstruction, even if the exact semantic development remains uncertain. The loss of the laryngeal would be regular in this position, acc. to Van Beek 2009.

•ETYM The above forms probably all go back to the them. present στέρομαι. The isolated ipv. Delph. σταρέστω, which Bechtel 1921, 2: 231 regards as a zero grade root aorist, is better explained as regular from στερέσθω (with ε > α before ρ in this dialect). First, the then-intransitive aorist στερ-ῆναι, -ήσομαι was formed from στέρομαι (if it were old, we would expect zero grade σταρ-), and then -ηθῆναι, -ηθήσομαι; later also the active στερ-ῆσαι (στερέσαι after ὀλέσαι, etc.), -ήσω, etc., and finally στερ-έω, -ίσκω (cf. e.g. εὑρ-ήσω, εὑρ-ίσκω). There are no certain cognates. A possible connection is with MIr. serb 'theft', which can reflect ster-u̯ā*.

•ETYM Not related to Skt. stabhnā́ti 'to prop up', as is traditionally thought, since the Sanskrit word reflects stm̥b^h-*, it is neither related to OHG stabēn 'to be fixed or stiff', ON stafr 'staff', and cognates, since the mg. is hardly compatible. Lidén 1924: 224ff. connected MoP tāǰ 'corona, diadema regium', Arm. t'ag 'id.' < PIE (s)tog^{wh}-o-*, which is followed by LIV^2 s.v.

•ETYM As στῆθος is also Dor. and Aeol. (Sicyonic στᾶθος may have ᾱ < η; see Thumb-Kieckers 1932: 129), the connection with ►ἵστημι (Chantraine 1933: 421, Benveniste 1935: 200) must be given up. The similarity to στήνιον· στῆθος (H.), Arm. stin, Skt. stána- [m.] 'female breast', etc. is hardly coincidental. If cognate, the relation between στήνιον and στῆθος would be like that of Lat. plēnus 'full' to πλῆθος 'multitude'.

στρωμνή, Dor. -ά, Aeol. -ᾱ [f.] 'carpet, mattress, bed' (Sapph., Pi., Att., etc.), with -άομαι in ἐστρωμνημένος (Phot.); cf. λίμνη, ποίμνη.
στρῶσις (ὑπό-, etc.) [f.] 'the spreading, plastering' (Hell. and late). στρωτήρ [m.] 'cross-beam, roof lath' (Ar. Fr. 72, Hell. and late), with -ήριον, -ηρίδιον 'id.' (EM, H., Suid.); στρώτης [m.] 'one that prepares the beds and dinner couches' (middle com., Plu.). Furthermore, the isolated στορεύς [m.] 'the lower, flat part of a device for making fire' (H., sch.). = γαληνοποιός (H.), which is probably derived from *στόρος or -ά? With o-grade also στόρνη [f.] = ζώνη (Call., Lyc.). The appurtenance of Myc.

a-pi to-ni-jo (of uncertain mg.) is unclear (see Taillardat REGr. 73 (1960): 5ff.). Also here στορνυτέα· καταστρωτέα, περιοικοδομητέα (H.).
•ETYM The three root forms in στόρ-νυμι : στορέ-σαι : στρω-τός, ἔ-στρω-μαι are partially leveled: στρώννυμι and στρῶσαι after στρωτός, ἔστρωμαι; στορέννυμι after στορέσαι. We find the same metathesis of the expected full grade στερο- < sterh*$_3$- to στορε-, like in ►κορέννυμι, θόρνυμαι (s.v. ►θρώσκω), etc. Cognates with a nasal present outside Greek are Skt. str̥ṇā́ti 'to spread out, extend, strew', Lat. sternō 'to spread out', OIr. sernim 'id.', Alb. shtrin 'id.'. The zero grade στρωτός corresponds to Lat. strātus, Lith. stìrta [f.] 'haystack'; cf. also Skt.stīrṇá- 'spread out' < strh*$_3$-no-. Gr. στρῶμα corresponds to Lat. strāmentum 'straw', while στόρνη corresponds to Ru. storoná 'region, side', but both formations are probably independent innovations. Cf. further ►στέρνον and ►στρατός.

•ETYM Unexplained; for the formation, cf. ►τορύνη.

•ETYM Denominative derivative from an unattested form *στόρχος, -ή without etymology. Cf. ►ταρχύω.

στόχος [m.] 'erected pillar, post, mark, fixed target' (E., X., Poll., Att. inscr.), also 'suspicion' (A., after στοχάζομαι)? A very rare word; part of the attestations is blurred. ◄IE? steg*^{h}- 'sting, bar'► •COMP ἄ-στοχος 'missing the target', εὔ-στοχος 'aiming well, hitting well' (Att., Hell. and late), hence ἀ-, εὐ-στοχ-ία, -έω.
•DER στοχ-άς, -άδος [f.] 'raising for the poles of fixing-nets' (Poll.); also adjective, mg. unclear (E. Hel. 1480 [lyr.], probably wrong v.l. for στολάδες); -ανδόν [adv.] 'by conjecture' (Theognost.). Denominative στοχάζομαι 'to target, shoot, seek to achieve, guess, conjecture, explore' (Hp., Att., Hell. and late), also with κατα-, etc.; (κατα-) στοχασμός, -ασις, -αστής, -αστικός; also στόχασμα [n.] 'javelin' (E. Ba. 1205; cf. Chantraine 1933: 145).
•ETYM No certain cognates outside Greek. Since the original meaning seems to have been 'erected pillar, post', we can compare Ru. stog [m.] 'heap, heap of hay' < stog*^{h}-, Bulg. stéžer 'post to bind horses to', Lith. stãgaras 'long, thin stalk of a plant', Latv. stęga 'long bar'. Not related (pace Frisk) is OE staca 'stake', which belongs to MoHG stechen < stig-*; cf. s.v. ►στίζω. The following forms from Germanic do belong here, however: ODan. stag 'point, germ'; OHG stanga, ON stǫng [f.] 'stick, pole', ON stinga, OE stingan 'to sting', etc. (on the relation with ►στάχυς, see s.v.).

•COMP στραγγ-ουρ-ία, Ion. -ίη [f.] = ἡ κατὰ στράγγα οὔρησις 'urination in trickles' (Gal.), 'strangury' (Hp., Att., Hell. and late), -ικός, -ιώδης, -ιάω, -έω; στραγγ-ίζω [v.] 'to squeeze out drop by drop' (LXX, Dsc. et al.), also with κατα-, ἐκ-, ἀπο-; στραγγ-εύομαι (also -γ-) 'to hesitate, linger, dawdle' (Ar., Pl. Hell. and late), with -εία [f.] 'hesitation' (M. Ant.).
•DER στραγγ-ός (also -γ-) 'flowing drop by drop', also 'tied together, entangled, by shocks, irregular' (medic., etc.), -εῖον [n.] 'drop-bottle' (medic.). στραγγ-ίας (πυρός) 'kind of wheat' (Thphr.), cf. Strömberg 1937: 91.
With a suffix -λ-: στραγγάλη [f.] 'cord, rope, noose' (J., Plu., S. E.), -αλίς [f.] 'entangled knot, induration' (com. V^a, Arist. et al.), -αλιά [f.] 'id.' (LXX, etc.), see Scheller 1951: 88, -αλιώδης 'knotty, entangled' (LXX, Com. Adesp.), -αλάω [v.] 'to choke, strangle' (Men., LXX), -αλίζω 'id.' (D. S., Str. et al.), also with ἀπο-; -αλισμός (gloss.), -αλόομαι 'to become entangled, ensnared' (Ph. Bel. et al.).
•ETYM For the formation of στράγξ, cf. στρίγξ, λύγξ, κλαγγ-ί, etc.; for that of στραγγ-άλη, cf. σκυτ-άλη, etc. Cognates are often assumed in Lat. stringō 'to string, tie together', if from strengō* with analogical i (see s.v. in De Vaan 2008); Latv. stringt < strng*^{h}- 'to become stiff, wither'; MIr. srengim 'to draw, drag'; ON strangr 'hard, rigid', OHG strengi 'stretched, stiff', MoE string. The PIE root streng*^{h}- probably meant 'to twist, string', which would have developed into 'to wrench'. If related, στραγγ- must be a contamination of στραγ- < str̥g^{h}- and στρεγγ- < streng^{h}-, with g* for g*^{h} from the nom.sg. στράγξ. In view of the fact that an Indo-European derivation requires several analogies and is not evident semantically, it is not improbable that the word is Pre-Greek. Note the variant forms without nasal, which may point to prenasalization.

στρατός [m.] 'troop, department of the people' (Pi., trag., Crete), 'troop of warriors, army, navy' (Il.), also '(military) camp' (Il.); στάρτοι· αἱ τάξεις τοῦ πλήθους '(battle) arrays of a multitude (of men)' (H.). ◄IE ster-* 'camp, spread out'► (Mylasa II^a). στρατύλλαξ [m.] disparaging diminutive of στρατηγός (Cic. Att.; cf. Delph. Στρατυλλις). Denominative στρατ-άομαι (-όομαι?) 'to troop together', only in epic ipf. ἐστρατόωντο (Il., A. R., Nonn.), also with ἀμφι-, ἐπι-, συν-; cf. Leumann 1950: 185, Chantraine 1942: 80, 359, 364; στρατ-όομαι in the ptc. στρατωθέν (στόμιον) 'consisting of an army' (A. Ag. 133 [lyr.]; Wackernagel 1916: 125). Further στρατ-εύω, -εύομαι 'to wage war, serve in the army' (IA), also with ἐκ-, ἐπι-, συν-, etc.; -εία, Ion. -ηΐη [f.] (ἐκ-, ἐπι-, συν-) 'campaign, war-service' (IA), -ευμα [n.] 'campaign, army' (IA), -ευσις (ἐπι-) [f.] 'campaign' (Hdt., D. •ETYM Probably originally 'camping army', reflecting str-to-*, the to-ptc. of the root ster-* 'to spread (out)' reflected in Skt. str̥ṇóti 'to lay down, destroy' (see Narten MSS 22 (1967): 57-66, LIV^2 s.v. ster-*); cf. further s.v. ►στέρνον 'breast, chest'. Corresponds exactly to Skt. str̥ta- 'thrown down, sprinkled', á-str̥ta- 'unconquered, unconquerable', Av. stərəta- 'spread out', OIr. sreth 'strewn'. The relation between the two roots ster-* and sterh$_3$-* is yet to be clarified.

στρεβλός [adj.] 'turned, twisted, crooked, cunning' (IA). ◂PG(V)▸

•DER στρεβλ-ότης [f.] 'crook, perversity' (Plu. et al.); στρεβλ-όω 'to twist, dislocate, torture, torment' (IA), also with δια-, κατα-; hence -ωσις, -ωμα, -ωτήριος; also -ευμα [n.] 'perversion' (Sm.). στρέβλη [f.] 'winch, roll, screw', also as an instrument of torture (A., Arist., Plb., etc.); formation like σμίλη, among others.

With o-grade we find: στρόβος [m.] 'whirl' (A. Ag. 657, H.); hence στρόβ-ῑλος [m.] 'top, whirlwind, whirlpool, fir-cone' (Att., Hell. and late), -ίλιον, -ιλίτης, -ιλέα, -ιλᾶς, -ιλεών, -ίλινος, -ιλώδης, -ιλίζω, -ιλόω (all late). στροβ-ίλη [f.] 'cone made of lint' (Hp.). στροβ-εύς [m.] a fuller's instrument (sch.). στροβ-εία [f.] 'fullery(?)' (Delos III^a). στροβελός· σοβαρός, τρυφερός 'rushing, delicate'; -ελόν· σκολιόν, καμπύλον 'curved, bent' (H.). στροβανίσκος· τρίπους 'three-footed' (H.). στροβάζων· συνεχῶς στρεφόμενος 'turning around continuously' (H.). Denominative στροβέω [v.] 'to turn around in circles, move violently, distract' (A., Ar., Hell. and late), also with δια-, etc. With nasal infix στρόμβος [m.] 'top' (Ξ 413), 'whirlwind' (A. Pr. 1084), 'snail-shell, snail, etc.' (Arist., Hell. poet.) with στρομβο-ειδής, -ώδης (Arist. et al.), -εῖον, -ιλος, -ηδόν, -έω, -όω (late).

With zero grade: στραβός 'squinting' (medic.), with -ων 'id.' (Com. Adesp.), also as a PN; στράβ-αξ PN, -ότης [f.] 'squint' (Orib. et al.), -ίζω 'to squint' (H., EM) with -ισμός (Gal. et al.). The original mg. is still present in στραβο-πόδης 'with twisted feet' (Hdn.). Further στράβηλος [m., f.] 'wild olive-tree' (Pherecr. [lyr.]), name of a snail (S. Fr. 324, Arist. et al.); στραβαλός· ὁ στρογγυλίας καὶ τετράγωνος ἄνθρωπος. Ἀχαιοί 'the well-rounded and square (i.e., perfect) man (Achaean)' (H.); στραβεύς· κωπεύς 'oar-spar' (H.) (Chantraine 1928: 17). Further, a number of forms with a root στροιβ- appear to be related: στροῖβος· δῖνος 'whirl, rotation' (H.) (cod. στροιβός· δεινός); Att. PN Στροῖβος; στροιβᾶν· ἀντιστρέφειν 'to turn to the opposite side', στροίβηλος· ἔπαρμα πληγῆς ἐν κεφαλῇ 'a swelling in the head caused by a blow' (H.); πολύ-στροιβος 'whirly' (Nic.), after πολύ-φλοισβος; hence the simplex στροῖβος, etc.? Perhaps also with -ει- in Thess. Στρειβουνείοι (see Bechtel 1921, 1: 210)? Borrowed as Lat. strabus, strabō, strambus.

•ETYM Reminiscent of ►στρέφω 'to twist, turn', in spite of the different labial. The variant with prenasalization and the frequent occurence wih the non-Indo-European suffix -ιλ- point to Pre-Greek origin. The root variant with -οι-, if not secondary (see above), is unexplained. Often taken together with ►ἀστραβής, which is doubtful.

•ETYM Traditionally connected with ON strjúka 'to smoothen', OE stroccian 'id.', OCS strъgati, Ru. strogát' 'to plane', strug 'plane'. However, this etymology is semantically unlikely and formally impossible: both the Germanic (an original geminate -kk-* < -g^{h}n-; see Kroonen 2009) and the Slavic forms (with no trace of Winter's Law) point to streug^h-. van Windekens Orbis 11 (1962): 343 compares ToB sruk- 'to die' (ToA sruk- 'to kill'), but the initial cluster is incompatible. With zero grade: ἐπιστραφ-ής = ἐπιστρεφ-ής (see above; late). PN Στραψι-μένης (Dor.).
•ETYM The root has no Indo-European cognates. Still, LIV[2] s.v. *$streb^h$- lists the root as Indo-European. However, as Van Beek suggests (p.c.), a comparison with ► στρεβλός and cognates strongly favors the conclusion that we are dealing with a Pre-Greek root (with variation β/φ).

•ETYM The exact semantic relation between στρηνές and στρῆνος is unclear. Traditionally compared to Lat. strēnuus 'active, vigorous'. This connection may be correct, although it is not evident semantically (see De Vaan 2008 for an alternative etymology of the Latin word). The Greek words may also reflect a lengthened grade derivation of the root of ► στερεός, but this remains speculative.

•ETYM Formation like γογγ-ύλος, καμπ-ύλος, ἀγκ-ύλος, etc. Connected to ► στράγξ by Frisk, but the meanings of the two words are not obviously connected. If the etymology is correct, στρογγύλος was either derived from a form with o-grade in the root, or it was influenced by γογγ-ύλος (Güntert 1914: 146f.). However, the whole complex (with or without στράγξ) may instead be Pre-Greek, in view of the suffix -υλ-.

Furthermore, the adjectives στυγ-ερός 'hated, full of hate, detestable' (Il., epic poet.), -νός 'id.', also 'gruesome, sad, etc.' (Archil., Hp., trag., etc.), hence -νότης [f.] (Hell. and late), -νία [f.] (sch.), στυγ-νόομαι 'to be somber' (AP, H.), also with κατα-; στύγνωσον· χώρισον (H.), στυγ-νάζω [v.] 'to be, become overcast' (NT et al.), also with δια-, κατα-, συν-; thence -νασις [f.] (late). στύγιος 'hated, detestable' (E., Plu.); στύγος [n.] 'hate, object of hate' (A. et al.). Στύξ, -γός [f.] river in the Underworld (Hom., etc.), adj. Lib. et al.).
•ETYM The name Στύξ is an archaic formation; it cannot be decided whether the pres. στυγέω or the aor. ἔστυγον is old, since the latter can be metrically conditioned; cf. e.g. ἔκτυπον s.v. ►κτύπος (see also Schwyzer: 721 and Chantraine 1942: 347).

There is no ascertained etymology. The root στυγ- has been compared to Ru. stýgnut' 'to cool down, get cold, freeze', but the latter is a variant of older stydnǫti* with -dn-* > -gn-*; cf. Cz. stydnouti 'to cool down', SCr. stûd [f.] 'cold' < stud-* /stoud-*. Hardly more convincing is the comparison with ToB ścono, śconiye 'enmity' (van Windekens Orbis 13 (1964): 224 f.), which rather belongs with the Slavic words above, if from steud-n-* (see Adams 1999 s.v.). LIV² s.v. (s)teu̯g-* follows a connection with Skt. toj- 'to drive, push', but this may also be related to h₂teug-* in Gr. ἀτύζομαι 'to be terrified'.

στῦλος [m.] 'column, pillar, support' (Dor. Ion., trag., Hell. and late), also = Lat. stilus 'pointed piece of metal' (late), cf. Sempoux Rev. belge de phil. 39 (1961): 736ff. ⊲IE sth₂-u-lo-* 'post'⊳

•ETYM These words are comparable to Av. stūna-, stuna- [m.], stunā [f.], Skt. sthū́ṇā- [f.] (with secondary -ṇ-) 'pillar' < sth₂-u-no-*, with a different secondary suffix (on the interchange of -l- and -n-, see Benveniste 1935: 43). Perhaps somehow connected with the root of ►τύπτω. The by-form στύμος· στέλεχος, κορμός (H.) shows variation π/μ, which could indicate Pre-Greek origin; see Fur.: 222-227. Not related to ►στύω 'to be erect', ►στῦλος 'pillar', etc.

•ETYM No known cognates, Fur.: 259f. compares τοπεῖον 'cord, rope' without further comment. The word is most likely to be of substrate origin. Borrowed as Latin stuppa, stūpa from στύππη, from a Doric dialect in Southern Italy.

•ETYM At first sight, epic στυφελίζω seems to be a derivation of the later attested στυφελός, but it is rather the other way around in view of the chronology and the semantics. The barytone accent of στύφλος is remarkable. It is perhaps a derivative of ►στύφω 'to astringe' (through 'contract > 'become solid'?). On στυφελίζω, cf. further Ruijgh 1957: 84ff.

An ingenious (but unlikely) hypothesis is advanced by Ruijgh 1967a §92, who argues that Myc. tu-ru-pte-ri-ja (scil. γῆ) stands for στρυπτηρία, the older form of στυπτηρία, which underwent dissimilation; he concludes that στύφω may have replaced older *στρύφω.

The gloss συώδη appears to be based on folk etymology. Several glosses can be compared to σύβακα, e.g. σύ[μ]βρος· κάπρος 'swine' (H.), but also συβριακόν· τὸ πολυτελές, συβριάζειν· σοβαρεύεται, τρυφᾷ and συβριασμός· ὁ ἐν εὐωχίᾳ θόρυβος (H.); cf. also σύβρα and συβροί, with unclear glosses. •ETYM It is formally attractive to assume that συλάω is derived from σῦλα, etc., but notice that the nominal forms are rare and have been attested later than the verb. In any case, the Att. mg. 'right of seizure' must be secondary and cannot be separated from ἄσυλος. The form ἄσυλος itself may derive from συλάω as 'who may not be taken away or be robbed'. There is no certain etymology. The forms are similar to ►σκῦλα 'booty', but their relation is unclear (see Schwyzer: 329 and Sánchez Ruipérez Emerita 15 (1947): 67f.); do they point to a Pre-Greek interchange σ-/σκ-? Pisani Sprache 5 (1959): 143ff. explains σκῦλον as secondary after ►σκῦτος, which seems doubtful. He thinks that σῦλα comes from Lydian, together with Lat. spolia 'booty'. The gloss ἐσσύλλα· ἀφήρει κτλ. (H.) is in the wrong place alphabetically, so it cannot be trusted. The word ὑλᾶται· ἐστερήθη, ἀπέθανεν 'was robbed, died' (H.) is unrelated (Pisani l.c.).

•ETYM From ►συνέχω, but further unexplained. Probably an artificial formation (on the mg., see Hartmann 1956: 250). Several attempts at an explanation have been undertaken: 1. Brugmann IF 13 (1902-1903): 280: reduplicated formation like συνοκωχή, ►ἀνοκωχή, etc. 2. Wackernagel Gött. Nachr. 1902: 738f. assumes a denominative *συνοχόω (from σύνοχος), since the reading συνοχωκότε seems to be the more reliable one. This was recently defended by Hackstein 2002: 164ff. 3. Schwyzer: 766[6] considers συνοχωκότε to be an enlargement of *συνοχότε (from *hεhοχα). Cf. further Chantraine 1942: 424[3].

συνωχαδόν [adv.] 'continuously' (Hes. Th. 390, Q. S.). ◄GR► •ETYM From ►ἔχω, with a suffix -αδόν and compositional lengthening to -ω-.

σύργαστρος [adj.] mg. unclear (Alciphr.; v.l. dat. sg. -ορι), epithet of snakes (AP 15, 26 = Dosiad. Ara), understood as τὴν γαστέρα σύρων 'sweeping with its belly'. Explained by EM, Phot. and H. (who has συργάστωρ) as 'swineherd', EM and Phot. = ἐργάτης 'farmer'; described by H. as ὄνομα βαρβαρικόν 'word of foreign origin'. ◄?►
•ETYM Radermacher Festschr. Kretschmer: 160ff. refers to Ζεὺς Συργάστης in Bithynia and assumes an originally foreign slave name.

σῦριγξ, -ιγγος [f.] 'quill, flute, syrinx' (Il.); also of pipe-like objects, e.g. 'windpipe, blood-vessel, fistula' (medic., etc.), 'spear case' (Τ 387), 'hole in the nave of a wheel' (trag., etc.), 'subterranean passage' (Plb., etc.). ◄PG(S)► •COMP πεντε-σύριγγος 'with five pipes' (Ar. et al.).
•DER Diminutive συρίγγ-ιον [n.] (Hp., Plu. et al.), -ίδιον [n.] (Hero). Other nominal derivations: συριγγ-ίς [f.] 'kind of ►κασία' (medic.). συριγγ-ίας [m.] designation of a tube (Thphr., Dsc.), cf. Strömberg 1937: 91. συριγγ-ίτης [m.], -ῖτις [f.] name of a precious stone (Ps.-Dsc., Plin.). συριγγ-ώδης 'hollow, fistular' (Hp.). συριγγ-ιακός 'meant for fistulae' (medic.; after καρδιακός, etc.).
Denominative verbs: συρίζω (Ion. poet. h. Merc.), Att. -ίττω (Pl., D., Arist. et al.), Dor. -ίσδω (Theoc.), aor. -ίξαι (Ar.), -ίσαι (Babr., Luc.), fut. -ίξομαι (Luc.), -ίσω (Hero et al.), -ιῶ (LXX) 'to blow the syrinx, whistle, hiss', also with ὑπο-, ἐκ, ἀπο-, etc. Hence σύρ-ιγμα [n.] 'tone of a pipe' (-ισμα H.) with -ιγματώδης 'pipe-like, hissing' (medic.), -ιγμός (X., Arist., etc.), -ισμός (LXX, etc.) [m.] 'the whistling, whirr', -ιγξις [f.] 'flute-playing' (sch.), -ικτής, -ιστής (Arist., Corn.), -ικτάς (Theoc., AP), -ιστήρ (AP) with -ιστηρίδιον mg. unclear (pap. I[a]), -ιγκτής (Phot.) [m.] 'flutist', also 'whistling'; συριστική (τέχνη) 'the art of flute-playing' (sch.). συριγγ-όομαι [v.] 'to become hollow, get a fistula', -όω 'to make into a pipe, etc.' (Hp. et al.), also with ἐκ-, προ-, ἀπο-; thence -ωσις [f.] 'formation of a fistula' (medic.), -ωμα [n.] 'fistula' (Vett. Val.). συριγγ-ιάω [v.] 'to suffer from a fistula' (Hippiatr.).

•ETYM A substrate word; cf. especially the non-Indo-European suffix -ιγγ-. The explanation by Solmsen 1909: 129ff. is to be rejected: a derivative in -ιγγ- from a noun *σῦρος vel sim., related to Skt. tūṇa- [m.] 'quiver', tū́ṇava- [m.] 'flute'. Neither can we follow Greppin KZ 103 (1990): 35-37, who assumes PIE origin.
Arm. sring 'flute, pipe' was probably taken from the same source. Borrowed as Skt. suruṅgā [f.] 'subterranean passage' (on the etymology and history of the meaning, see Stein ZII 3 (1925): 280ff.).

•ETYM There are many alternating forms, and no clear Indo-European etymology, so Pre-Greek origin is very likely (Fur.: 135, 241, 392, 300).

•VAR Aor. σῦραι , pass. συρῆναι (late), fut. συρῶ (LXX), perf. σέσυρμαι, -κα (Hell. and late).
•COMP δια- 'to hackle, mock', ἐπι- 'to be neglectful, treat neglectfully', κατα-, παρα-.
•DER With suffixes with -μ-: σύρμα (ἀπό-, ἐπί-, παρά-, περί-) [n.] 'train-dress, sweepings, dragging movement' (Ion., X., Hell. and late), hence συρματῖτις κόπρος 'swept-together heap of manure' (Thphr.), συρματικὴ φωνή 'drawn-out accent' (VII^p), συρματὶς στρατιά· ἡ τὰ συμψήγματα καὶ φρύγανα σύρουσα καὶ συλλέγουσα 'woman sweeping and collecting what has been raked together and firewood' (H.), συρμός (ἐπι-, περι-, ὑπο-) [m.] 'grinding, dragging, pulling movement' (Arist.), 'vomiting' (Nic.); δια- 'pulling apart, mocking' (Hell. and late); from this συρ-μάδες [f.pl.] 'snow-drifts' (late), -μαία, Ion. -μαίη [f.] 'vomitive, radish' (Ion., Ar., etc.), also name of a Laconian priest rank (inscr., H.), -μαΐζω 'to take a vomitive', -μαϊσμός [m.] (Hdt., medic.), -μίον· λάχανόν τι σελίνῳ ἐοικός 'greens like celery' (H.), -μιστήρ· ξυλοπώλης 'wood seller' (H.), συρμή [f.] 'trailing tail of a snake' (sch.).
Further σύρ-της [m.] 'towing-rope' (Man., H.), -τῶν [gen.pl.] (nom.sg. -της or -τός) name of a dance (Akraiphia I^p), διασύρ-της [m.] 'slanderer' (Ptol.), δια-, ἐκ-συρτικός (Hell. and late). ἀνασυρτ-όλις [f.] 'lewd woman' (Hippon.), from ἀνα-σύρτης 'who draws up (the clothes)', cf. οἰφόλις 'who copulates' and Chantraine 1933: 237f. Probably also related Σύρτις [f.] name of a gulf on the north coast of Africa with sandy shores and dangerous breakers (Hdt., etc.), known as "the pulling one" (cf. v. Wilamowitz on Tim. Pers. 99); metaphorically 'destruction' (Tim. Pers. 99, H.).

σύρσις [f.] (also διά-) 'the drawing of a plough' (late). With enlargement -φ- (from κάρφη 'hay'?): σύρφη· φρύγανα 'firewood' (H.), συρφ-ετός [m.] 'sweepings, filth' (Hes., Call., Plu. et al.), 'rabble' (Pl. et al.), also -ετώδης 'vulgar' (Plb., Luc. et al.), see Chantraine 1933: 300, Schwyzer: 501; -ᾶξ [m.] 'rabble' (Ar. V. 673 [anap.], Luc.). On σύρφος 'some insect' see s.v. ►σέρφος. Possibly also here: ►ἀσυρής 'lewd'.
•ETYM Probably related to ►σαίρω 'sweep', if both reflect a root tuer-* 'to sweep'. In this case, σύρω reflects tur-e/o-*, with analogical σ- (rather than tuor-e/o- with Cowgill's Law, as per Vine 1999b: 569ff., with morphologically awkward o-grade). The form σαίρω would reflect tur-ie/o-, with regular vocalization of the r (cf. e.g. ►σάρξ 'flesh' < turḱ-*). For possible connections outside Greek, see s.v. ►σαίρω. Since σύρφ-η, -ετός, -αξ probably derive from σύρω within Greek, a connection with OHG swerban 'to drive quickly to and fro, whirl, wipe off' and W chwerfu 'to whirl, turn around' (Pok. 1050f.) is improbable. See ►σύργαστρος.

Also (mostly Hell. and late) συο-, e.g. -φορβός [m.] 'swineherd' (Plb. et al.), -φόρβιον (Arist.; σῦ-φορβός Hom. et al.), metrically conditioned συη-βόλος (Opp.) = συο-κτόνος (Call., Nonn.).

•ETYM The inherited form is ὗς (= Lat. sūs) < PIE suHs*. The initial σ- of σῦς is somehow secondary, perhaps after ►σίαλος 'fatting pig'; alternatively, it is a LW from another IE language, or derives from an otherwise unattested cognate of Lith. kiaūlė 'swine' (it is senseless to adduce σωλούς· ὗς [H.], as von Blumenthal 1930: 45f. does). Not an onomatopoeia, as per West Glotta 76 (1998): 232f.

•ETYM Traditionally compared with Lat. sūber 'cork-oak, cork', in spite of the semantic difficulties. If correct, we are dealing with borrowings from a common source. Acc. to Pisani RILomb. 73:2 (1939-40): 27, it is related to ὕφεαρ 'mistletoe', but semantically this is hardly probable.

σῦφεός [m.] 'pigsty' (Od., Parth., Gp.). ◂?▸
•VAR Also -ειοῦ κ 389 with metrical lengthening at verse end; cf. Chantraine 1942: 104. Also συφός (Lyc., Poll.), -εών [m.] 'id.' (Agath., Gp.), after ἀνδρ(ε)ών, etc.
•ETYM For the ending, cf. φωλεός 'lair', etc. Probably derived from σῦς, but the details are unclear. See ►σῦς.

σφάγνος [m.] name of a bush, = ἐλελίσφακον, ἀσπάλαθος (Diocl. Fr., Dsc.). ◂PG(V)▸ •ETYM Fur.: 124 compares σφάκος 'sage-apple, salvia; tree-moss' and φάγνος 'salvia' (gloss.) and φάσκον 'kind of moss (Thphr., φάσκος H.). Given these variants, the word is Pre-Greek.

σφαδάζω [v.] 'to flounce, rear (of horses), be uneasy, twitch' (Hp., trag., X., Plb., Plu. et al.); ἀνασφαδάζειν· ἀναπηδᾶν, ἀνάλλομαι, λακτίζειν 'to leap or spring up, kick with the heel' (H.). ◂?▸

•DER σφαδ-ασμός [m.] 'flouncing, twisting' (Pl.), -αστικῶς 'flouncing' (Eust.).
•ETYM Hdn. Gr. 2, 929 recommends a form σφαδάιζω (-ᾴζω), like ματᾴζω, which may be hypercorrect. An expressive word without a convincing explanation. For comparison, ►σφοδρός, ►σφεδανός, ►σφενδόνη, and ►σφόνδυλος have been adduced, but σπάω, σπαδών may also be considered; cf. σφαδασμός· σπασμός, καὶ τὰ ὅμοια (H.). In the latter case, the variation points to substrate origin.

σφάγ-ιος 'belonging to the slaughter, killing' (Hp., S. [lyr.] etc.); σφάγ-ιον (προ-), mostly pl. -ια [n.] 'victim, oblation, especially before a battle' (IA) with -ιάζομαι, -ιάζω 'to slaughter, sacrifice' (IA), -ιασμός [m.] (E. [lyr.], Plu. et al.).
σφαγ-ίς [f.] 'slaughter knife, sacrificial knife' (E. et al.), also referring to σφαγή; -ίδιον (Suid.); but ἐπι-σφαγ-ίς 'nape of the neck, where the axe strikes' and παρα-σφαγ-ίς 'part next to the throat' (Poll.). σφαγ-εῖον [n.] 'sacrificial bowl' (A., E., Ar., inscr.), derived form σφαγ-ή or -εύς, also σφαγ-ιστήριον (sch.). σφάγμα [n.] 'the killing' (sch.), also with prefix in e.g. πρόσφαγ-μα (A., E. et al.). Late σφάκ-της [m.] 'murderer', in compounds, e.g. with καλαμο- 'one who kills with a pin' (Ph.), with -τικὴ μάχαιρα (Zonar.); σφακ-τήρ [m.] 'murderer', only with δια- and χιμαρο- (AP); -τρια [f.] 'sacrificial priestess' (Ael.). σφάκ-τρον [n.] 'sacrificial tax' (Palmyra II^{p}, Poll.).
As a second element -σφάξ, e.g. in δια-σφάξ, -άγος [f.] 'rip, split, chasm' (Hdt. et al.), also -σφαγ-ία [f.], e.g. βοο- 'the killing of oxen' (APl.).
•ETYM The attested formations are productive, so they can all be derived from either the verb σφάζω, σφάξαι or from a nominal root σφαγ-. No cognates outside Greek; Fur.: 300 connects ►φάσγανον as φασγ-/σφαγ-, which remains uncertain.

σφαῖρα [f.] 'sphere, ball, balls in a boxing-glove, globe' (Od.). ◂?▸

(Tab. Heracl., Hell. pap.); see Solmsen IF 31 (1912/13): 492ff. Lat. spaerīta [m.] kind of cake (Cato; Leumann Sprache 1 (1949): 206) probably derives from an unattested *σφαιρ-ίτης.
•ETYM The formation is like that of ►πεῖρα, ►σπεῖρα, ►μοῖρα, etc. No cognates outside Greek. Sometimes connected to σπαίρω 'to flaunce', but the semantics are hardly convincing, and the initial cluster remains unexplained. The word σφαῖρα was borrowed into Syr. êspērō, Ethiop. ṣpīr (Schwyzer: 159 and 161), and Arm. sp'eṙ (>> Georg. spero; Bailey TPS 1945: 28).

Strömberg 1937: 191, 'heavy pain' (Stoic.), 'epilepsy' (Hippiatr.); ἐπι-, ἀπο-σφακέλισις [f.] 'gangrene' (Hp.).
•ETYM Formation like σκόπελος, πύελος, etc. from an unknown root. The word was originally a medical expression, acc. to Chantraine 1933: 244. Starting from a meaning 'convulsions (of pain)', Persson seeks to connect MHG spachen 'to split', LG spaken 'burst, putrefy', etc., which can hardly be correct. Cf. ►σφάκος, ►σφήξ, and ►φάκελος.

The hapax σφάλος [n.] (trag. POxy. 676, 16) is uncertain. See also on ► ἄσφαλτος, which may have been folk-etymologically adapted.
•ETYM The derivational patterns are the same as those of e.g. ► πάλλω and ► σκάλλω. Traditionally connected to Skt. skhálate, -ti 'sumble, stagger, err', Arm. sxalem, -im 'id.'. Rix 1976: 31 (also LIV^2 s.v. (s)g^{wh}h$_2$el-) reconstructs sg^{wh}h$_2$el- with Siebs' Law, which seems a good possibility. •ETYM The formation of σφεδανός is similar to that of ἑδανός, στεγανός, σκεπανός, ἰδανός, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 196f., Schwyzer: 489f.). Together with σφοδρός, σφεδανός may reflect a heteroclitic r/n-stem (Benveniste 1935: 20), but this is uncertain. Possible Greek cognates are ► σφαδάζω and ► σφενδόνη.

•DER Hence the possessive pron. σφέτερος, σφωΐτερος (Il.), epic also σφός 'their' (rarely reflexive), with σφετερίζομαι, -ίζω 'to make one's own' (Att. Hell. and late), -ισμός, -ιστής (Arist.).
•ETYM The oldest forms were probably σ-φει and σ-φι(ν), with σ- a zero grade of IE se- (Lat. si-bī, Osc. sí-feí, OCS se-bě). The forms σφε, σφεῖς, σφᾶς, σφῶν, etc. were created in analogy to ἄμμι(ν), ἄμμε, ἡμεῖς, etc.; φιν and ψιν developed irregularly from σφιν with loss of σ- and metathesis, respectively. •VAR Note σπένδαμνον· ξύλον 'wood' (H.).

•DER -ινος 'of maple' (Cratin., Ar.).
•ETYM Formation like δίκταμνον, ῥάδαμνος, etc. Often connected to σφενδόνη 'sling etc.', either through a meaning 'trembling' or after the form of the seeds (Carnoy Ant. class. 27 (1958): 318 and Carnoy REGr. 71 (1958): 99). Fur.: 164 compares σπένδαμνον· ξύλον (beside ἄκαστος· σφένδαμνος and κάστον· ξύλον [H.]). The word is probably Pre-Greek (Schwyzer: 524, Alessio Studi etruschi 15 (1941): 177). See also Amigues RPh. 73 (1999): 102f.

σφενδόνη [f.] 'sling', from wool, hair, animal sinews, etc., often metaph. of sling-like objects, e.g. 'bandage, headband, case on a ring, white of the eye' (Il.); also 'throw, missile' (Ar., X.), referring to σφενδονάω. ◂PG▸ •COMP Rarely as a second member, e.g. βελο-σφενδόνη 'arrow-sling, fire-missile' (Plu.).
•DER σφενδον-ήτης, Boeot. -άτας [m.] 'slinger' (Hdt., Th. et al.), -ητική (τέχνη) 'the art of slinging' (Pl.), -ηδόν 'like a sling' (sch., EM); -αίαν· σφενδόνην, ἢ τὴν σφραγῖδα 'sling, signet' (H.). Denominative verb σφενδον-άω 'to sling' (IA), also with ἀπο-, δια-, ἐκ-; thence -ησις [f.] (Hp., Pl. et al.). Similarly σφενδον-ίζω 'id.' (Ps.-Callisth.), -ιστής [m.] (Them.).
•ETYM Formation like ἀγχόνη, περόνη, βελόνη. No convincing etymology; most often connected within Greek to σφεδανός, σφοδρός, σφαδάζω, and to Skt. spandate 'to pull, beat out' (Pok. 989). Further often compared with Lat. funda 'leather strap, sling', which would point to a common loan from a Mediterranean or Anatolian source (E-M s.v. funda). This source is likely to have been Pre-Greek.

•DER Diminutives σφην-ίσκος [m.] (Hp. et al.), -άριον [n.] (late medic.), uncertain -ίς, -ίδιον (Hero). Further σφανίον· κλινίδιον 'small couch' and ἐν σφανίῳ· ἐν κλιναρίῳ 'in bedsteads' (H.); but παρα-σφήν-ιον [n.] 'side-block for wedging' (Hell. inscr. and pap.). σφην-όομαι, -όω 'to be wedged, to wedge (in)' (Arist., medic., Hell. and late), often with, e.g. ἀπο-, δια-, παρα-; σφήνωσις (ἀπο-, δια-, ἐπι-) [f.] 'wedging in' (medic. et al.), ἀποσφήν-ωμα [n.] 'wedge-shaped block' (pap. II^p).
•ETYM The form σφήν reflects *σφᾱν, *σφανσ-, or *σφα-ην (cf. σφανίον and Cean σφηνόπους < σφᾱν-). The traditional identification with a PGm. spēn-u- 'chip' (OHG spān, OE spōn, ON spánn, spónn) must be given up because the labials do not match. The same goes for the connection with Skt. sphyá- [m.] 'shoulder-blade', Khot. phvai 'spade, shovel', which are rather related to ►σπάθη (see s.v.). The word σφήν therefore remains without an etymology.

σφήξ, -ηκός [m.] 'wasp' (Il.). ◂PG?(V)▸
•VAR Dor. (Theoc.) -ᾱκός [m.].
•DER σφηκ-ιά [f.] 'wasp-nest' (S., E., Ar., LXX et al.), see Scheller 1951: 68, -ίον [n.] 'comb in a wasp-nest' (Arist., Thphr. et al.), cf. also ἐπι-σφήκ-ιον [n.] of unknown meaning (Delos III^a). σφηκ-ίσκος [m.] 'pointed wood, rafter, etc.' (Ar., Arist., inscr. et al.), -ίας [m.] 'id.' (Pherecr.), also name of a verse (Ps.-Plu.), cf. σφηκικός, σφηκώδης. σφήκ-ειον [n.] 'wasp-like insect' (Nic.), -εια [f.] old name of the island Cyprus (Lyc., H.).
Further in the adjectives σφηκ-ικός 'wasp-like', name of a verse (Eust.) and -ώδης 'id.' (Ar. et al.), also name of a verse (sch.). We further find a denominative verb σφηκ-όομαι 'to be contracted, bound in the middle', -όω 'to contract, bind' (P 52, Ar., Hell. and late epic, late prose), often with prefix, e.g. ἀπο-, δια-, ἐπι-; thence -ωμα [n.] 'point of a helmet' (S., Ar.), 'cord, cable' (pap. III^a, etc.). Rarer derivatives are σφηκισμός· εἶδος αὐλήσεως, εἰρημένον ἀπὸ τῆς ἐμφερείας τῶν βομ<β>ῶν 'an imitation of the buzzing of a wasp on the flute' (H.), -ίωσις· κηρία σφηκῶν 'honeycombs of wasps' (H.), the unclear σφηκός = σφηκώδης (S. Fr. 29), σφηκός λόφου· τὸ ἄκρον τοῦ λόφου κτλ. 'the summit of a hill, etc.' (H.) and σφήκη [n.pl.] of unknown meaning (pap. III^a).
•ETYM For the formation, cf. ►μύρμηξ and ►σκώληξ. A comparison with σφήν 'wedge' seems attractive, but is morphologically impossible. Persson 1912(1): 396 hesitantly compares σφάκελος, referring to the constricted body of the wasp; one may also think of the sting of a bee, but again the formal side of the derivation remains unclear. The word has also been connected to ψήν 'gall-insect' (see Fur.: 393). This comparison points to Pre-Greek origin (ψ-/σφ-), which seems most attractive. Connection with ψῆν 'to rub' cannot be proven.

•VAR Aor. σφίγξαι, σφιγχθῆναι, fut. σφίγξω, perf. med. ἔσφιγμαι; non-pres. forms almost only Hell. and late.

σφίγξις (ἀπό-, διά-, περί-), also ἀπό-σφιξις [f.] 'the binding' (medic. et al.). σφίγμα (ὑπό-) [n.] 'obstruction' (Hero, medic.).
•ETYM The pres. σφίγγω has been taken to be the oldest form, and the nasal-less forms ἔσφιγμαι, σφίγμα and ἀπόσφιξις to be secondary. It is possible, however, that the variation is due to Pre-Greek prenasalization. Borrowed as Lat. spinter 'bracelet', spintria 'male prostitute' (because of the contractile muscle of the anus).

Σφίγξ, -ιγγός [f.] 'sphinx' (Hdt., A., E., etc.), also name of a monkey (Agatharch. et al.). ◂PG(S, V)▸ •ETYM Formation like κόνδυλος, δάκτυλος, probably first from a noun *σφόνδος. Sometimes connected with words like ►σφενδόνη, ►σφεδανός, and ►σφαδάζω, supposedly containing a verbal root 'to jerk vel sim.', but this is mere speculation. The variation σπ/σφ- points to Pre-Greek origin.

Σφραγίδιον, the name of a cave (ἄντρον) of prophesying nymphs on the Cithairon (Paus. 9, 3, 5), where the νύμφαι Σφραγίτιδες live (Plu. Arist. 11).
•ETYM Formation like κληΐς, κνημίς, etc., which points to a secondary derivative. The Σφραγίτιδες νύμφαι were connected to ►σφαραγέομαι by Lobeck 1837: 51[59]. Prellwitz 1892 s.v. suggested connection with Lith. spróga 'crevice', sprógti 'to explode, burst'. Though formally possible, these etymologies are rightly called "semantically enigmatic" by DELG. Fur.: 324[7] takes the word to be Pre-Greek because of the suffix -ῑδ-. This is possible; DELG remarks that the use of the saw in the Aegean is pre-Hellenic.

σφρῑγάω [v.] 'to be full to bursting' especially of women's breasts, metaph. 'to be swollen with passion or pride', more generally 'to brim with vitality' (Hp., A. Pr. 382, E., Pl.). ◂PG?▸

•ETYM Intensive formation in -άω (Schwyzer: 719). Hardly related to MoNw. dial. sprikja, MoSw. dial. sprika 'to unyoke, spread out, split apart, etc.'. The word σφριαί· ἀπειλαί, ὀργαί 'boasts, anger' (H.) must also belong here, with irregular loss of -γ-. Fur.: 175 compares Celtic brīgos* 'power, courage, liveliness'; beside σφριαί, he adduces (168) βρι, βριάω, (247) βριμάω, (375) ὄβριμος, and βρῖμός, which would suggest substrate origin.

•ETYM The traditional etymology connecting this word with Skt. sphuráti 'to push away with the foot', etc. cannot be maintained, because the labials are incompatible. The variant σφυδρά [pl.] (Act. Ap. 3, 7, pap. III[p], H., gloss.) is unexplained (hardly after σφοδρός 'violent, vehement', pace Frisk s.v.).

•ETYM Usually an original meaning 'make an incision, tear open' is assumed, whence 'open, let loose, etc.'; the word would be characteristic for the language of physicians.

A basic meaning 'let loose' vel sim. seems possible as well, in which case the common professional expression φλέβα σχάσαι would have a direct correspondence in MLG (also MoDu.) āderlāten 'let blood', lit. 'let the vein'. As the whole formal system is clearly built on the aor. σχάσαι, from which σχάζω, σχάω and all other verbal and nominal forms are derived, this form should be the starting point for the etymology. Certain correspondences outside Greek have not yet been found. The word σχάω is generally compared with Skt. chyati (anu-, ava-, vi-, etc.), ptc. chā-ta-, chi-tá-, caus. chāy-áyati (IE $skeh_2$-, skh_2-i-) 'to split, hurt', especially of the skin (on the meaning, see Hoffmann MSS 19 (1964): 61ff.; on the phonetics, Hiersche 1964: 103f., 214f.). Although the connection is semantically unobjectionable, it should be remarked that of the Skt. verb forms, the non-presentic finite forms (e.g. the full grade s-aorist a-chā-s-it) occur only in grammarians. Further combinations, e.g. that with Lat. sciō, remain hypothetical. The form σχάσαι is a Greek innovation (perhaps a cross of σχίσαι and ἐάσαι, χαλάσαι vel sim.)? Note that σχ- cannot be directly explained from the assumed IE form.

B. With altered root auslaut: 1. σχίζα [f.] 'split wood, piece of wood, etc.' (Hom., Ar., pap.), 'shaft, javelin' (LXX,AP); diminutive -ίον [n.] (Poll., Alciphr.); -ίας [m.] 'lath, like a lath' (Cratin., Dicaearch., Hell. pap.). 2. σχιστός (also ἄ-) 'split' (Hp., Att.). 3. σχίσις (ἀπό-, διά-, etc.) [f.] 'split, carving' (Pl., Arist.). 4. σχισ-μός (δια-, περι-, ὑπο-, ἐν-) [m.] 'id.' (A. Ag. 1149, Delph. inscr., pap.); -μα (also with ἀπό-, διά-, etc.) [n.] 'split, tear' (Arist., Thphr.); -μή [f.] 'id.' (LXX, H.).
•ETYM A number of identical formations are found in other IE languages, which may be archaic: 1. ἀπο-σχίδ-ες = Skt. apa-chíd- [f.] 'section, clipping', 2. σχιστός = Lat. scissus < skid-to-*, Av. a-sista- (but note Skt. chinná- < chid-ná-*), 3. the aor. σχίσαι, -ασθαι to Skt. aor.med. chit-s-i, 4. traces of an old nasal present in Lat. sci-n-dō, Skt. chi-ná-d-mi, 3pl. chi-n-d-ánti 'to cut off, split' (not in ▸σκινδάλαμος, etc. [s.v.]). The yod-present σχίζω is a Greek innovation (Wackernagel 1916: 133 pleaded against identification of σχίζεται and the Skt. pass. chid-yá-te). A full grade appears in Lith. skíedžiu 'separate, divide'. Skt. ví-chitti- 'interruption' is independent of σχίσις (which was innovated; cf. πίστις).
Further cognates, e.g. Arm. c'tim (from c'it-im*) 'tear, scratch', can be found in LIV^2. The reconstruction of the root as PIE sk^heid-* given there is not endorsed here. There is no explanation for the aspirate -χ-.

Lat. scheda [f.] 'stroke of papyrus' is a loan from *σχίδη (or σχίδα; see A. 1 above), also 'concept', via influence of schedium [n.] 'unprepared speech, draft, sketch' (= late and MoGr. σχέδιον 'id.'; on the meaning, see σχέδιος, from σχεδόν), σχεδάριον; on the history of these words, including Ital. schizzo, MoFr. esquisse, MoHG Skizze, see Kretschmer Glotta 10 (1920): 168 ff.

Various hypotheses have been put forward for the etymology, e.g. relation to σηκός (Pok. 1098), or kinship with σῴζω from IE tu̯oH-ko-* (Fraenkel Lexis 3:1 (1952): 66ff.), who compares the suffix -k- in Lith. tùkti 'become fat', taukaĩ [pl.] 'fat, grease, marrow'.

•ETYM Formation like κωλήν, πυρήν, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 166f.), so probably first derived from a noun σωλος (-ον). Etymology unclear; Solmsen 1909: 129ff. •ETYM Among several IE expressions for 'body', only krp- (Lat. corpus, Skt. kr̥p-, and other cognates) has a large distribution. For the Greek word for 'body', σῶμα, there is no convincing etymology. Formally, it could be compared with σω-ρός 'heap', assuming a pre-form tu̯oH-mn̥* for σῶμα, with a basic meaning 'compactness, swelling' (?). Other proposals are doubtful or uncertain (see Frisk); relatively most promising seems an analysis as (s)ti̯oH-mn̥* "what has stiffened", related to Skt. styā- 'to flow, get stiff' (mentioned by LIV^2 s.v. sti̯eH-*). 'rescue'. On the frequent PNs in Σω(ι-), Σωσ(ι)-, Σωτ(ο)-, etc. see Bechtel 1917b: 413ff.
•ETYM The above forms may all go back to PGr. σάϝος (cf. Cypr. Σαϝο-κλέϝης). It is unnecessary to posit alternative basic forms like *σῶϝος. The form σῶς arose from σά(ϝ)ος by contracted, and σῶος in turn by thematization (perhaps the ntr.sg. σῶον via plur. σῶα); epic σόος may stand for σάος after σῶς, or arose by metrical lengthening. PGr. σάϝος is probably a thematization of σαυς < tu̯eh_2-u-s. Connection with σωρός, σῶμα (as tu̯oH-ro-, tu̯oH-mn̥) is quite uncertain: the original meaning would be something like 'to be strong', which fits poorly for a corpse; moreover, a reconstruction tu̯oh_2-mn̥* (with o-grade) is improbable. •ETYM Formation comparable to ►κειρία 'band, tapeworm, etc.'; cf. also κοιλία, ἀντλία, and other secondary formations in -ία. Probably ultimately related to τείνω, but the details are rather unclear. The missing link may be a noun like *ταῖνα or *ταινά; cf. σφαῖρα.

ταλα- 'bearing, enduring, etc.' ◄IE telh$_2$-* 'bear, endure'► •COMP As a first member in verbal governing compounds (epic poet.): ταλα-(ϝ)εργός 'enduring labor' (Hom., Hes., Theoc.), ταλα-πενθής 'enduring harm' (ε 222, B.), ταλα-πείρ-ιος 'who has overcome many tests' (Od., etc.). Besides, with the second member as a subject, ταλά-φρων 'of enduring mind' (N 300, Opp.; also ταλασι-, ταλαι-). After this ταλα-κάρδιος 'with tolerant heart, suffering' (Hes. Sc., S. [lyr.]).

•ETYM From ►ταλάσσαι. Further also ταλαι-; see ►ταλαίπωρος. Cf. also ταλαύρινος (to ►ῥινός) and ►ἀταλός; ►ταλαός, ►τάλας, ►τάλαντα, ►τάλαρος.

ταλαίπωρος [adj.] 'enduring hardship or distress, pestered, unhappy' (A. Pr., S., Ar., Pl., D.). ◄?►
•VAR Substantivized: τὸ ταλαίπωρον 'endurance, effort' (Hp., Ar., D. H., App.).
•COMP Bahuvrīhi ἀ-ταλαίπωρος 'without endurance' (Hp., Th., Ar.).
•DER ταλαιπωρ-ικός 'persistent, hardened' (Gal.); -ία (Ion. -ίη, often plur.) [f.] 'effort, labor, ἐνέργεια' (Hp.), 'effort, hardship, suffering' (Hdt., Att.); -έω, -έομαι [v.] 'to make effort, toil, suffer' (IA), the active sometimes also trans. 'to pester, agonize' (Isoc., D. C.), with -ησις, -ημα (late); also -ίζω = -έω (Phld., Sm.), with -ισμός (Phld.).
•ETYM The first member ταλαι- equals ►ταλα- (s.v.). For the second member, some words that are almost only transmitted by lexicographers (H., Suid.) have been compared, and connected with πῆμα, πηρός by WP 2, 8: πωρεῖν· κηδεύειν, πενθεῖν 'to mourn, suffer' (Elean, acc. to Suid.), πωρῆσαι· λυπῆσαι 'to be grieved', πωρητύς· ταλαιπωρία, πένθος 'suffering' (also Antim.), also πῶρος· ὁ ταλαίπωρος; however, πωρός· τυφλός, πώρωσις· τύφλωσις (Suid.) derive from πῶρος 'stone', πωρόω 'to harden, strike with blindness'. Others compare the Gm. word for 'danger', fēr-* (older litt. in Frisk).

τάλαντα [n.pl.] 'scales, balance' (epic poet. Il.), also a designation of a unit of weight and currency, 'talent' (since Il.). ◄IE telh$_2$-* 'bear, endure'► •VAR Secondary sing. τάλαντον 'balance' (Thgn., B., A., Ar.), 'talent' (since θ 393).
•COMP As a second member in ἡμι-τάλαντον [n.] 'half a talent' (since Ψ 751 and 796), properly a substantivized adjective, 'consisting of half a talent' (Risch IF 59 (1949): 51); ἀ-τάλαντος 'having the same weight, equal' (Il., Hell. epic).
•DER ταλαντ-ιαῖος 'worth one talent' (Att.), -ιεῖος 'id.' (pap. III[a]); -εύω (also with ἀμφι-, ἀντι-) [v.] 'to weigh, balance, sway to and fro', pass. 'to swing' (Arist., D. S.), with -εία [f.] (conj. Pl. Cra. 395e); -όομαι (δια-) [v.] 'to swing to and fro' (Pl., Ach. Tat.), with ἐκ- 'to be robbed of one's talents' (Sopat. Com.); ταλάντ-ωσις [f.] 'weighing, swinging to and fro' (Antipho Soph., Arist.); -άω = -εύω (EM).
•ETYM Properly "bearing", a participial formation tlh$_2$-ent-* fromo the root telh$_2$-* in ►ταλάσσαι, etc. (see Beekes 1975: 51). Borrowed as Lat. talentum, -a. On ►Ἀταλάντη, see s.v. See ►τάλᾱς.

ταλαός [adj.] 'enduring, tolerant, unhappy' (Ar. Av. 687 [anap.], Q. S.). ◄GR► •ETYM Formation like ταναός, but perhaps just a shortening of ταλα-κάρδιος vel sim.

τάλαρος [m.] 'basket' (Hom., Hes. Sc., Ar., Mosch., Paus.). ◄IE telh$_2$-* 'bear'► •DER Diminutives ταλαρ-ίσκος [m.] (Arist., Theoc., AP), -ιον [n.] (pap. III[p], Poll.).

•ETYM Properly "bearer", a substantivization from an adjective *ταλα-ρός, built from the root $telh_2$-, with regular shift of accent. For the formation, cf. λαγα-ρός, χαλα-ρός, etc. See ►ταλάσσαι.

τάλᾱς [adj.] 'wretched, unhappy', expression of compassion (epic poet. Od.). ◄IE *$telh_2$- 'bear, endure'► •VAR τάλαινα [f.], τάλᾰν [n.], gen. τάλανος, -αίνης, -ανος, dat. also -αντι (Hippon.), voc. τάλαν.
•ETYM Originally, a formation in -ντ- from ►ταλάσσαι (like τάλαντα), which turned into an n-stem after the example of μέλας, -ανος because of the frequent vocative (Solmsen IF 31 (1912/13): 499ff.). See ►τᾶν.

ταλασία [f.] 'wool-labor, wool-spinning' (Pl. Lg., X., Ph., Plu.). ◄GR► •DIAL Myc. ta-ra-si-ja 'quantity of bronze or wool weighed for working'.
•COMP As a first member in ταλασι-ουργ-ός [f.] 'wool-spinner' (Pl. Ion, Trypho apud Ath.), with -ικός (Pl. Plt., X.), -ία [f.] (Pl. Plt.), -έω [v.] (X., D. S., Luc.) after δημιουργ-ός, -ικός, -ία, -έω.
•DER ταλάσ-ιος (in -α ἔργα) 'concerning wool-spinning' (X.), -ήϊα ἔργα (A. R., Nonn.; after πολε-μήϊα ἔργα); ταλάσια· τὰ ἔρια 'wool' (H.).
•ETYM The word ἐργασία probably served as an example for the formation of ταλασία (cf. Pl. Ion 540c: ἀλλ' οἷα γυναικὶ πρέποντά ἐστιν εἰπεῖν ταλασιουργῷ περὶ ἐρίων ἐργασίας, 'but as far as it befits a wool-working woman to say things about wool-working'). The form ταλασία was created from ταλάσ(σ)αι after the examples of ἐργάσασθαι : ἐργασία, γυμνάσασθαι : γυμνασία, δοκιμάσαι : δοκιμασία, etc. (Schwyzer: 469).
It is best to assume 'to weigh' (like in τάλαντα) as another meaning of ταλάσ(σ)αι 'to endure' (although further unattested). Thus, ταλασία would properly mean *'weighing (for sbd.)', like Lat. pēnsum '(weighed off) wool, wool-labor, day-work for a woman'. Differently, Solmsen IF 31 (1912/13): 503ff., who assumed an intermediate form *ταλάτης, properly meaning 'who has to endure laborious work', comparing Ru. stradát' 'to suffer', dial. 'to harvest', with stradá 'heavy labor, harvest work'.

ταλάσσαι [v.aor.] 'to endure, tolerate' (Il.). ◄IE *$telh_2$- 'bear, endure'► •VAR Med. -ασθαι (Opp.), fut. ταλάσσω (Lyc.); τελάσσαι· τολμῆσαι 'to dare', τλῆναι (H.). Further τλῆναι (Dor. τλᾶναι), also with ἀνα-, etc., fut. τλήσομαι (Dor. Aeol. τλάσ-), perf. τέτληκα, plur. τέτλᾰμεν, ptc. τετληώς.
•COMP As a first member in τλή-θυμος (Dor. τλᾱ́-) 'of patient mind, patient' (Pi., AP), Τλη-πόλεμος PN (Il.), also τλησι-κάρδιος (A. [lyr.]); besides ταλα-(ϝ)εργός, ►ταλαίπωρος, ταλασί-φρων. As a second member in πολύ-τλᾱς 'much-enduring, persisting', of Odysseus (Hom.), probably from a stem -$tleh_2$-t-, so Aeolic. Not here ►Ἄτλας.
•DER 1. ►ταλαός. 2. τλητός, Dor. τλᾱτός 'able to tolerate, bearable' (Ω 49, trag.), more usual ἄ-τλητος, ἄ-τλᾱτος 'unbearable' (epic poet. Il.), πολύ-τλητος 'much-enduring, much-tested' (λ 38). 3. τλήμων, Dor. τλᾱ́μων 'persevering, steadfast, tolerant, troublesome, unhappy', also 'enterprising, bold, brutal' (epic poet. Il.), with τλημοσύνη [f.] 'steadfastness, patience, patient acceptance' (Archil., h. Ap.).

•ETYM The aorist ταλάσσαι has a secondary disyllabic zero grade (cf. δαμάσ(σ)αι, χαλάσαι), but we also find τελάσσαι (H.), which probably represents the old full grade $telh_2$-, like in ἐλάσαι, κεράσ(σ)αι, κρεμάσαι, etc. In the other tenses (except for the present), τλη- was generalized. The short vowel in τέτλᾰμεν is secondary after ἕσταμεν. The form τλῆναι may be a replacement of τελάσσαι after στῆναι et al. The present ►τέλλω in ἀνατέλλω 'go up, rise, lift up', etc. is isolated formally and semantically.
For cognate verbal forms, see LIV[2] s.v. $telh_2$-, and for the history of the Greek formations, Harðarson 1993b. Latin has a perfect te-tul-ī continuing te-$tolh_2$-$h_2$ei (ToA ca-cäl 'he raised' [caus.pret.] is a regular formation). The to-ptc. in τλη-τός, τλᾱ-τός neatly corresponds to Italo-Celtic forms: Lat. lātus from tlā-tos* < tlh_2-to-, MW tlawdd 'poor' (with the same meaning as in τάλας). A zero grade of the root is found in Skt. tulā́ [f.] 'balance' < IE tlh_2-eh_2- and in Germanic, e.g. Go. þulan, OHG dolēn 'tolerate' from a stative tlh_2-eh_1-.
In Greek, the meaning has been narrowed to 'tolerate, endure' in the verbal forms, while ἀείρω is used in the sense of 'support'.
See ►τέλλω 2, ►τελαμών, ►τόλμη, ►Τάνταλος, ►τάλαντα, etc.

ταλαύρινος 'shield-bearing'. ⇒ ῥῑνός.

ταλάωρ, -ωρος [m.] 'bow' (Euph. 9, 12; of the bow of Artemis, Choerob. in Theod.). ◄?►
•DER ταλαώρεα· τοξεύματα 'bows' (H.).
•ETYM Unexplained.

τᾶλις, -ιδος [f.] 'young, nubile girl, bride' (S. Ant. 629 [anap.], Call. Ait. 3, 1, 3). ◄?► •ETYM Perhaps an Aeolic form of ►τῆλις (s.v.).

ταμία [f.] 'housekeeper, conductress' (Hom., Alcm., X., Hell. inscr.). ◄GR► •VAR Ion. -ίη. More usual ταμίας (Ion. -ίης) [m.] 'housekeeper, conductor, manager, treasurer' (Il.), also used for Lat. quaestor (Hell.).
•DIAL Myc. PN Ta-mi-je-u.
•COMP As a second member in Ἑλληνο-ταμίαι [pl.m.], designation of Athenian officials that administered the funds of the league at Delos (Att.).
•DER ταμι-εύω [v.] (sometimes with δια-, etc.) 'to manage, economize', med. 'to manage, save up, take in' (IA), with -εῖον [n.] 'storehouse, treasury, fiscus' (IA), diminutive -είδιον (Suid., perhaps Men. Sam. 402 [=233] Jacques), -εία [f.] 'management, administration' (Pl. Lg., X., Hp., Arist.), -ευσις [f.] 'id.' (Ael.), -εύματα [pl.n.] 'economy measures' (X.), 'provisions' (D. S.), -ευτής [m.] 'administrator' (Poll. v.l.), -ευτικός 'economic' (pap., Poll.), τὸ ταμιευτικόν 'economy' (M. Ant.), -εύτωρ [m.] 'id.' (Man.), -εύς [m.] (St. Byz.; back-formation), -ευτήριον = ταμιεῖον (sch.). Further ταμι-ικός, -ιακός 'of the ταμίας or ταμ(ι)εῖον' (Hell. and late inscr. and pap.).
•ETYM Connected with ταμεῖν 'to cut (up), divide', but the details of the formation are not quite clear. Since examples of primary derivatives in -ίας do not exist, an intermediate nominal form is needed. Generally, ταμίας is considered to be a masculine innovation of the feminine ταμία '(female) housekeeper', which is more common in Homer, but much rarer elsewhere. However, this is contradicted by the fact that comparable primary formations in -ία (πενία, μανία, θαλία) are abstracts. Schwyzer: 470 and 473[3] assumes that ταμία is based on τάμ-ιᾰ (Pi., doubtful), from which ταμίας was then secondarily created. Conversely, one might think that *ταμία [f.] 'cutting up, division' led to ταμίας [m.], from which ταμία 'housekeeper' was formed based on ἀγγελίη from ἀγγελίης 'messenger' (cf. on ►ἄγγελος).

•DER ταμισ-ίνης τυρός 'cheese made with rennet' (Diocl. Fr.; like ὀξίνης, etc.), -ιον [n.] 'coagulum' (gloss.).
•ETYM Has been compared with ταμεῖν, with the suffix found in μάδισος, κύτισος (cf. Chantraine 1933: 435). DELG and Frisk justify the development of meaning by pointing to σχίζειν τὸ γάλα 'to curdle milk' (Dsc.) and to γαλατμόν = λάχανον ἄγριον 'wild herb' H., if this contains the root temH- 'to cut'. However, this etymology for γαλατμόν may well be wrong. Rather, τάμισος is Pre-Greek because of the suffix -ισ-.

τᾶν only in ὦ τᾶν (ὦ τάν), a popular form of address (Att.). ◂GR▸ •VAR Also τάν.
•ETYM Acc. to Kretschmer Glotta 1 (1909): 58, it may have developed from τάλαν. Doubts by Björck 1950: 275ff., who deals extensively with meaning and attestations.

τανaός [adj.] 'thin, narrow, outstretched, expanding widely, long, high' (epic poet. since P 589). ◂IE *tnh$_2$-eu- 'thin'▸ •VAR Myc. ta-na-wa (of wheels).
•COMP As a first member in ταναό-δειρος 'with a narrow or outstretched neck', of οἰωνοί (Ar.), often with elision of the -ο-, e.g. τανα-ήκης 'with a long point, edge', of weapons (Hom.), 'lofty', of rushes, mountains (Opp., Orph.; cf. on ἠκή), also ταναύ-ποδα epithet of μῆλα 'thin-legged, with stretched feet' (ι 464, h. Ap., h. Merc.). With -αι- (after ταλαι-, παλαι-, etc.): ταναί-μῡκος 'far-bellowing', of βοῦς (AP).
•ETYM Christophe KZ 114 (2001): 90-116 recently argued that the root *ten- had no laryngeal. However, the laryngeal is necessary for almost all branches: Celtic forms like OIr. tanae 'thin' < PCl. *tanau̯i̯o- << *tnh$_2$-eu-o-, Lith. tę̃vas 'thin, slender, high (of voices)', Latv. tiêvs 'thin, slender' < *tenh$_2$-u-ó-, OCS tьnъkъ, Ru. tónkij, Sln. tänak 'delicate, fine' < *tnHu-k-, and probably also Lat. tenuis < *ten(a)u̯i- < PIt. *tn̥(a)ui- < IE *tnh$_2$-eu-. The Germanic evidence is ambiguous regarding the laryngeal, e.g. OHG dunni < PGm. *þunw-. The Greek form presupposes *tnh$_2$-eu-o-; cf. Beekes MSS 34 (1976): 9-12. Within Greek, comparanda are ►τανυ- and ►τάνυται. Christophe's assumption that *tnu- gave τανυ- in Greek is unnecessary, and his assumption of another prop vowel in t°n°-wo-, giving ταναός, is improbable.

τανεῖαι [f.pl.] 'beam' (Thphr. HP 4, 1, 2). ◂IE *tenh$_2$-u- 'thin'▸ •ETYM Formally, this seems to be the feminine of an adjective *τανύς (see ►τανυ-); semantically, this is quite possible.

τανηλεγής [adj.] 'reckless, heedless, inconsiderate', only in τανηλεγέος θανάτοιο (Hom., Tyrt.). ◂IE *h$_2$leg- 'care for'▸ •VAR Also -έως (metr. inscr. Phrygia).
•DER Similarly δυσ-ηλεγής (also of θάνατος χ 325), also of πόλεμος, etc. (epic), ἀπ-ηλεγέως (epic since Il.), ἀν-ηλεγής (πόλεμος), -έως (Q. S.), νηλεγής, -έως (H.).
•ETYM The second member belongs to ►ἀλέγω 'to care for'; νηλεγής < *n̥-h$_2$leg- contains the negative prefix. In view of the meaning, Leumann 1950: 45 (following Blass and Bechtel 1914 s.v.) reads τ' ἀνηλεγής, which would fit the semantics excellently. Szemerényi 1964: 154, 159 defends the connection with τανυ-.

τανθαρύζω [v.] 'to quiver'. ◂PG(V)▸
•VAR Only in ἐκτανθαρύ<ζ>ω· τρέμω H.; also τανθαλύζει· τρέμει. Δωριεῖς. οἱ δὲ σπαίρει 'trembles (Dor.), others: quivers' (H., cod. ταντ-, but at an alphabetically wrong position); influenced by ταντaλίζει (see ►Τάνταλος). With ο-vocalism τοιθορύσσειν· σείειν 'to shake', τοιθορύκτρια· ἡ τοὺς σεισμοὺς ποιοῦσα 'who causes shaking' (H.). Also ἐτανθόριζον· ἔτρεμον (H., leg. ἐτανθάρυζον?). Further details in Debrunner IF 21 (1907): 266.
•DER Also τανθαρυστοί [pl.] "the quivering ones", epithet of ὅρμοι 'necklaces' (Theopomp. Com. 95).
•ETYM Popular words with intensive reduplication; as to be expected, without clear genealogy. Frisk cites an old proposal to connect some Balto-Slavic words for 'to tremble, etc.', e.g. Ru. drógnut' 'tremble', dróž' [f.] 'shiver', Lith. drugỹs [m.] '(cold) fever, butterfly'. Discussion in Tichy 1983: 212f. The word ►τονθορύζω may be identical, with α > ο before υ. If so, the variation points to Pre-Greek origin.

Τάνταλος [m.] father of Pelops, grandfather of Atreus, mythical king of Sipylos in Asia Minor, famous for his riches and punished in the underworld for his faults (Od.). ◂?▸
•DER Ταντaλ-ίδαι [m.pl.] 'offspring of T.' (A. [lyr.]), -ίς [f.] 'daughter of T.', i.e. Niobe (APl.), -ειος 'belonging to T.' (E., etc.), also -εος (AP) and -ικός (Man.); -ῖτις [f.] name of a plant = Γοργόνειον, λιθόσπερμον (Ps.-Dsc.) referring to the rock that threatened to crush T. (Redard 1949: 77, Strömberg 1940: 101).
Verbs: 1. ταντaλ-ίζω 'to hover' (Anacr.), med. 'to weigh?' (proverb in Zen.), ταντaλίζεται· σαλεύεται 'is rocked', ἐταντάλιζεν· ἔτρεμεν 'trembled', ἐταντaλίχθη· ἐσείσθη 'was shaken' (H.). 2. -όομαι in ταντaλωθείς (S. Ant. 134 [lyr.]), acc. to sch. ad loc. = διατιναχθεὶς ἄνωθεν κάτω, διασεισθείς 'shaken from top to bottom, shaken all over'.
•ETYM Connection with the root ταλα- is impossible, as this contained a laryngeal. It is unclear how the verbs ταντaλ-ίζω, -όομαι relate to Τάνταλος. They were probably influenced semantically by τάλαντα; cf. Pl. Cra. 396d, where Τάνταλος is interpreted as ταλάντατος "who has to bear much" (from ►τάλας). On τανθαλύζει (cod. ταντ-), see s.v. ►τανθαρύζω. An IE interpretation is most improbable.

τανυ- 'thin, narrow, slim'. ◂IE *tenh$_2$-u- 'thin'▸ •COMP As a first member in several compounds, and originally adjectival, e.g. τανύ-φλοιος 'with thin bark' (P 767, etc.), -φυλλος 'with narrow leaves' (Od.), τανύσφυρος (beside τανί-σφυρος, after καλλί-σφυρος or dissimilated from υ … υ?) 'with slim ankles' (Hes., h. Cer., Ibyc., B.), τανυ-ήκης 'with a thin point' (Il.; also τανα-ήκης, see ► ταναός). τανυ- disappeared as an independent adjective at an early date. In some cases, it may have been semantically influenced by ► τάνυται, τανύω, which seems clear in τανύ-πτερος (Hes., h. Cer. et al.), τανυ-πτέρυξ (Il.), also τανυσί-πτερος (Od.) 'with spread wings' or 'speading the wings' (less clear are cases like τανύ-πεπλος, -γλωσσος, -θριξ. Sommer 1948: 127f., tries to show that τανυ- was originally a verbal member (to be rejected).

•ETYM An adjective *τανύς, which apparently disappeared in Greek, has exact correspondences in several languages: Skt. tanú- 'thin, sweet, unimportant', Lat. tenuis 'thin, etc.' (regularly reflected as an i-stem), ON þunnr < þunwa-* (i-stem in OHG dunni 'thin'), OCS tьnъkъ, Ru. tónkij 'thin, fine, slender' (for the suffix, cf. Skt. tánuka-), all ultimately reflecting IE tn̥h_2ú-*. An old feminine form of *τανύς seems to have been preserved in ► τανεῖαι.

(Lyc.), -ακτικός 'fit for confusion, disturbing' (late), -ακτρον [n.] "spatula" as a term of abuse, 'trouble-maker' (Ar.), -ακτήριον [n.] 'id.' (sch.).
ταραχ-ή [f.] 'confusion, trouble, uproar' (Pi., IA), with -ώδης (IA); as a second member in ἀ-τάραχος 'without trouble, calm' (Arist., Hell.), also ἀ-τάρακτος, with ἀταραξ-ία, -ίη (Hp., Hell.); rare τάραχος [m.] = ταραχή (X., Hell.).
•ETYM Greek formed two presents from the root $d^hreh_2g^h$-: θρᾱ́σσω (with aor. θρᾶξαι) and ταράσσω (with aor. ταράξαι, perf. intr. τέτρηχα, etc.); the latter could also be a denominative from ταραχή. For further connections, see ► θρᾱ́σσω. Since a formation d^hr̥h_2-eg^h- is rather doubtful, ταραχή seems to require a special development of the zero grade d^hr̥h_2g^h-*, perhaps conditioned by the accent (as defended by Rix).

•DER τάρβος [n.] 'fright, shyness' (Ω 152 = 181, trag.; ταρβο-σύνη [f.] (σ 342), with -συνος 'frightening' (A. Th. 240 [lyr.]), after γηθο-σύνη, -συνος; ἀ-ταρβ-ής [adj.] 'fearless' (N 299, Pi.), from ταρβέω or τάρβος; verbal adjective ἀ-τάρβ-ητος 'id.' (Γ 63), also ►ἀτάρβακτος. Further ταρβαλέος [adj.] 'terrible, fearsome' (epic poet., h. Merc.; after σμερδαλέος, θαρσαλέος), ταρβήεις 'fearsome' (Nonn.), like κοτήεις; ταρβάλυξ, -υγος = ὁ ταρακτικός (Hdn. Gr. 2, 743). Further details, especially on the use in Hom., in Ruijgh 1957: 163.
•ETYM The date of the attestations and their frequency suggest that τάρβος was secondarily created from ταρβέω, so denominative origin is improbable for the verb. The word τάρβος is often compared with Skt. tarjati (epic, class.) 'threaten, revile', Lat. torvus 'grim, fierce', MW tarfu 'disturb, trouble, scare', Hitt. tarkuu̯ant- 'looking angrily', for the reconstruction of a root terg*^{w}-. However, there are problems in the reconstruction of the Welsh word (see Matasović 2009 s.v. targ*^{w}-o-), and the semantic development of 'angry, fierce' to 'shy' in Greek is not clear.
Fur.: 219 compares ταρμύσσω. Moreover, it is difficult to explain the element ταρβ- from the proposed IE forms, as a zero grade would give *τραβ-. On the Skt. forms, see Kuiper 1956: 215[18]. ToA trak 'blind', ToB tärrek 'id.' are certainly unrelated, since they are compounds with ek 'eye' (A ak) as a second member.

•DER Further οἶνος τεταργανωμένος 'sour wine' (Pl. Com.), ταργαίνειν· ταράσσειν 'agitate' (H.).
•ETYM Not well explained. Traditionally compared with ►στεργάνος and ►τρύξ. The difference in final velar makes comparison with the group of terk-*, trek- 'turn' (Lat. torqueō 'to turn, wind', Skt. tarkú- 'spindle', etc.; see Pok. 1077) impossible. Expressions for 'turn' are often applied to drinks that have "turned" sour, bitter, or the like, viz. ὁ οἶνος τρέπεται, with τροπίας 'spoiled wine, τάργανον', Ital. il vino dà la volta 'id.', MoFr. le lait tourne 'the milk becomes sour', and many more examples. Semantically, one may compare MoDu. wrang 'herb, bitter, sour' to Go. wruggo 'snare'. The variation τ-/σ- shows that the word is Pre-Greek. However, the appurtenance of the following glosses, adduced by Frisk, is uncertain: ταργάναι· πλοκαί, συνδέσεις, πέδαι 'twinings, links, shackles' and τεταργανωμένη· συμπεπλεγμένη, συνειλημμένη 'plaited together, taken together' (H.); they barely attest a meaning 'turning, winding', etc.

Of these, the comparison with σ/ταργάν- is useless; it is unclear whether σάρπους is cognate or not. Fur.: 183, etc. compares δάρπη· σαργάνη, κόφινος (H.), which would point to a Pre-Greek word.

ταρσός [m.] 1. Both Frisk and DELG assume that the remarkable shift of meaning to 'blade of the foot, etc.' started from the flat form of the relevant objects. There are also phonological problems with this explanation: it is improbable that tr̥s-* would give ταρσ- in Greek, and the co-ocurrence of ρα and αρ is also problematic in itself. (The maintained intervocalic -σ- may be explained by the chronology of sound changes, however: cf. Manolessou and Pantelidis 2008.) Chantraine 1933: 82 points to the a-vocalism. Acc. to Bechtel 1917b: 426 and Bechtel 1921(3): 126, the PN Τήχιππος (Eretria) would contain an old noun *τῆχος = τάχος. Seiler 1950: 40 explains θάσσων, θᾶσσον as an adaptation of *θήσσων to the timber of ταχύς, τάχιστος. More likely is secondary lengthening of an older short vowel in θάσσον, as argued by Wackernagel Gött. Nachr. 1914: 124f. For extensive discussion on the comparison, see Seiler 1950: 37ff. The etymology remains unclear. Against the old connection with Lith. déngti 'run, hurry', etc., see Fraenkel 1955 s.v. deñgti. The word ταχύς ousted the old PIE word ὠκύς, which remained alive only in poetry.

'to be provided with a tone' (Eust.); χειρο-τον-έω [v.] 'to stretch out one's hand, vote, elect', with -ία (Att.), as if from χειρο-τόνος (A. [lyr.]), originally a compound of χεῖρα τεῖνειν; τον-όω (ἐπι-, συν-) [v.] 'to stretch, strengthen, provide with a tone' (Ti. Locr., Hell.), with -ωσις, -ωτικός (medic.). 2. τονή [f.] 'duration of a tone' (music). 3. τάσις [f.] 'tension, stretch, etc.', mostly from the prefixed verbs, e.g. ἔντασις : ἐν-τείνω (IA), τατός (Arist.), ἐντατός (Pl.), etc. 'stretchable', τατ-ικός 'giving a tension' (Orib.), almost only with prefix, e.g. διατατ-ικός (Hell.). 4. τένων, -οντος [m.] 'sinew, neck-muscle, tendon of Achilles' (Il., epic Ion. poet., Arist.). 5. With reduplication τετανός 'stretched, tense, tight, lank' (Hp., Thphr.), 'tight, lank-haired' (Hell. pap.) = τετανό-θριξ (Pl.). τέτανος [m.] 'catalepsy, tetanus' (Hp., Pl., Arist., etc.), with τεταν-ικός 'suffering from catalepsy', -ώδης 'cataleptic' (medic.), -όω [v.] 'to stretch out, make lank, smoothen' (Dsc.), -ωθρον [n.] 'skin-smoothening agent' (Dsc.), -ωμα [n.] 'id.' (medic.). 6. τεινεσμός [m.] 'constipation' (medic., Nic.), with -ώδης (medic.), after πιεσμός (the variant with την- (Bechtel 1921(3): 333f.) remains to be explained. 7. *τένος [n.] in ►ἀτενής; from the verb e.g. διατεν-ής 'stretching out' (Thphr.), often with nominal first member, e.g. ἁλι-τενής 'stretching out unto the sea', also 'shallow' (Hell.); on ►εἰλιτενής s.v.

•ETYM The system of Greek τείνω derives from the root *ten- 'to stretch', found in most branches of IE (forms in LIV^2). Skt. preserved an old athematic aorist á-tan 'stretched', from IE He-ten-t*. In Greek, the full grade of the verbal root is preserved in the primary derivative τέν-ων, -οντος (see Strunk 1967: 107), and in the s-stem adjective ἀ-τενής, where *τένος is formally identical with Lat. tenus, -oris [n.] 'string with a noose' and Skt. tánas- [n.] 'posterity' (only RV 5, 70, 4) from IE ten-s-*.
Beside this root-aorist, Skt. had an s-aorist atāṃsīt, med. atasi (zero grade), which corresponds to Greek ἔ-τειν-α from IE Hé-tens-m̥*. Instead of the old νυ-present in ►τάνυται, τανύω, Greek innovated a yod-present τείνω, which agrees with Alb. nden 'to stretch', if from en-ten-i̯ō*. Among the nominal formations, we find Greek τόνος beside Lith. tānas [m.] 'ulcer', Skt. tāna- [m.] 'thread, tone' (with remarkable identity of meaning), tána- [n.] 'posterity'.

•VAR Also τοῖχος [m.] 'wall' (Il.).
•DIAL Myc. to-ko-do-mo /toikʰo-domos/.
•COMP To τοῖχος: τοιχ-ωρύχ-ος [m.] 'butlar, house-breaker', with -ία [f.], -έω [v.] (Att.); ἀργυρό-τοιχος 'with silver walls' (A. [lyr.]), ἐν-τοίχ-ιος 'on the wall' (D. H., Ruf. apud Orib.; uncertain X. An. 7, 8, 1). Compounds, e.g. τειχεσι-πλῆτα (s. πέλας); with transition to the o-stems e.g. τειχο-μαχ-έω 'to fight at the walls', -ία f. (IA), -ᾶς m. (Ar. •DER To τοῖχος: τοιχ-ίδιον [n.] (late), -ιος 'belonging to a wall' (Lebadeia), -ίζω 'to list, heel over', of a ship (Ach. Tat., Eust.). To τεῖχος: 1. Diminutive τειχ-ύδριον [n.] (X.), -άριον [n.] (pap. I^p; belittling), -ίδιον [n.] (Zonar.). 2. -ίον [n.] 'wall (of a house)' (Od., Ar., Th., X.). 3. -ωμα = φραγμός (AB; enlargement), -ωτός = Lat. vallaris (Rom. time). 4. -ιόεις 'walled in' (B 559 = 646), -ιοῦσσα [f.] island near Milete (Th.); also -ιόεσσα (Archestr.). 5. τειχ-ικός = Lat. vallaris (στέφανος ~ = corōna vall.; Rom. time). 6. τειχ-ίζω [v.] 'to build a wall, fortify with a wall' (IA since H 449, also Dor.), often with prefix, e.g. περι-, ἀπο-, ἐπι-, with -ισις, -ισμα, -ισμός (also with περι-, etc.) 'wall-building, fortification' (Att.); -ιστής [m.] 'mason, builder' (LXX, Lib.). 7. -έω = -ίζω (Hdt.), with -ητός 'fortified' (Att. IV^a).
•ETYM Greek τοῖχος corresponds exactly to Skt. deha- [m.] (also [n.]) 'body', with dehī́ [f.] 'wall, damm, hill', Av. pairi-daēza- [m.] 'surrounding wall' (see ►παράδεισος), and Gm. words like Go. daigs [m.] 'dough', all from IE dʰoiǵʰo-* [m.]. ToB -tsaika 'shaper', from tsik- 'to form, build', and Arm. dēz 'heap' are both probably innovations (cf. Arm. dizanem, aor. dizi 'to heap up'). The formation of τεῖχος < IE dʰéiǵʰ-s-* [n.] is isolated, but the e-vocalism is also found in Osc. feíhúss [acc.pl.] 'walls', o-stem. The basic verb is preserved in Skt. deh- 'to spread, lute' as an athematic formation déhmi; Latin has a nasal present in fingō 'to spread out on, knead, build'. Greek ►θιγγάνω is unrelated.

τέκμαρ [n.] 'sign, emblem', rarely 'goal, end' (Hes., Pi., A., E., A. R.), also 'symptom' (Hp., Aret.). ◂IE kʷek̑-* 'see, appear'▸

From τέκμωρ: τεκμορ-εύω [v.] 'to testify one's loyalty to the emperor', with -εῖοι ξένοι (inscr.). From τεκμήρασθαι: τεκμήριον [n.] 'sign, feature, emblem, proof, evidence, symptom' (IA) with -ιώδης 'evidential, giving evidence' (Arist.), -ιόω [v.] 'to provide a testimony, proof' (Th.), -ιόομαι [v.] 'to detect, conclude from signs' (Hell.), with -ίωσις [f.] 'testimony, proof' (Arr.).
•ETYM Etymologically, τέκμαρ is connected with the Indo-Iranian group of Skt. cáṣṭe, cákṣate 'to see' < kʷe-kʷk̑-toi*, -e-toi, also cákṣus- [n.] 'eye', Av. cašman- [n.] 'id.', where the latter also displays a suffix starting with -m-.

τέκνον [n.] 'child, young animal, shoot' (Il.). ◄IE teḱ-* 'beget, bear'► •COMP Many compounds, e.g. τεκνο-ποιός 'begetting children', with -έω, -ία (IA), εὔ-τεκνος 'with good or many children', also (Arist.) 'good to the young', with -ία, -έω (trag., Arist.).
•DER 1. Diminutive τεκν-ίον (late), -ίδιον (Ar.); 2. -οῦσσα 'rich in children' (S. Tr. 308; cf. S.), -ωμα [n.] 'production, child' (A. Fr. 315 = 625 M.).
•ETYM Usually connected with a Germanic word for '(free) follower, servant, warrior, hero', also 'boy, youngling': ON þegn, OE þeg(e)n, OS thegan, OHG degan [m.], from PGm. þegna-. This identification is not without problems, however, as IE teḱ-nó- would have yielded PGm. þekka-. Skt. ták-man- [n.] 'descendant' is only attested in lexicographers and is better left aside. The word has several cognates in Greek; see ►τίκτω.

•DER 1. τέκταινα [f.] 'craftswoman, initiator' (Hes. Th. apud Chrysipp. Stoic., Call. Fr. anon.). 2. τεκτο-σύνη [f.] 'art of building' (ε 250, E. [lyr.], AP), also with ἀρχι- 'id.' (Pisidia). 3. Τεκτον-ίδης [m.] patronymic (θ 114). 4. τεκτον-ικός 'belonging to a carpenter, skilled in building', also with ἀρχι- 'belonging to the architect or to the art of building' (Pl., Arist.). 5. -εῖον [n.] 'carpenter's workshop' (Aeschin., Delos). 6. τεκτον-εύω [v.] 'to carpenter' (Hero), also with ἀρχι- 'to plan, construct', with -ευμα [n.] 'construction' (Bito). 7. τεκτον-έω [v.] 'to carpenter, be a carpenter' (Ph.), with -ία [f.] (Thphr. [?], AP); also with ἀρχι- 'to be a builder, construct' (Ar., Hell.), with -ία, -ημα [n.] (Hell.).
Older denominative τεκταίνομαι [v.] 'to carpenter, manufacture, invent, machinate' (Il.), aor. τεκτ-ήνασθαι, fut. -ανοῦμαι, Hell. and late also -αίνω (also with prefix, e.g. παρα-, συν-, ἐπι-); ἐπιτεκταντῆρες (-τεκν- cod.)· οἱ παρασκευασταί 'providers' (H.). See ►τέχνη.
•ETYM Old expression of carpenting and building, identical with Skt. tákṣan- [m.] 'carpenter' and Av. tašan- [m.] 'builder, creator', going back to an n-stem built on the reduplicated root tetḱ-*. On the feminine type τέκταινα versus Skt. takṣṇī́-, see Peters 1980a: 158f. Several languages preserve the basic reduplicated verbal formation te-tḱ-*: Skt. tákṣati 3pl., OAv. tāšt 'to timber, create', Latv. tešu, test 'hew', iterative Lith. tašau, -ýti, OCS tešǫ, tesati 'id.'. Hitt. takš-zi 'to devise, produce, etc.' is probably an s-present, while Lat. texō 'weave, twine', also 'build, timber', is ambiguous between teḱs-* and tetḱ-*; see De Vaan 2008 s.v. Greek replaced the verb with the denominative τεκταίνομαι.

τελαμών, -ῶνος [m.] 'carrying-strap, belt, strap, binding, bandage' (Il., epic Ion.), as an expression of architecture 'column' (Hell., late Pontic inscr.), also 'base of a column' (Argos V^a)? Plur. telamones 'male figures used as supporting pillars, ἄτλαντες' (Vitr.). Also as a mythical PN (perhaps originally the bearer of the vault of heaven). ◄IE telh₂-* 'bear, endure'► •DER τελαμων-ίδιον [n.] 'small bandage' (late medic.), -ίζομαι [v.] 'to be bound' (Hell.). Patronymic Τελαμώνιος (Αἴας; Il., etc.).
•ETYM The original meaning is "bearer" and, like τλήμων, τελαμών is an agent noun to the verb for 'bear' seen in τλῆναι, ►ταλάσσαι, with a full grade root like in τελάσσαι· τολμῆσαι, τλῆναι (H.). It has been compared with a Celtic word for 'sling, trap', e.g. OIr. teilm (tailm DIL), MW telm, for which a reconstruction PCl. telmi-* is possible.

τελευτή [f.] 'end, end of life, fulfillment, closure, termination' (Il.). ◄?►
•COMP Some compounds, e.g. ἀ-τέλευτος 'endless' (A. [lyr.]); also προ-τελευτή [f.] 'early death' (Vett. Val.), back-formation from προ-τελευτάω.
•DER τελευτ-αῖος 'located at the end, outmost, last' (IA, also completed in Pi.); -άω [v.] (also with ἀπο-, ἐκ-, προ-, etc.) 'to end (life), fulfill, conclude', with ἀποτελεύτησις [f.] 'conclusion, result' (Pl.).
•ETYM An isolated verbal noun, which seems to presuppose a verb *τελεύω (like κελεύω); the pair τελευτή: τέλος recalls ►κρατευταί: κράτος. A remarkable similarity is found in ToB klutk- 'turn', etc., which can be derived from a Pre-Tocharian root kʷlouT-* vel sim., to which a suffix -sk- was added. However, genetic relation to Greek τελευτή is highly unlikely. See ►τέλομαι, ►τέλος.

τέλθος [n.] 'payment, tribute, debt' (Call.). ◄GR?►
•VAR Also τέλθος· χρέος 'obligation, debt' (H.).

•DER As a simplex in τελλομένου ἔτεος (A. R.). Also finite forms in the sense of 'to change, originate, become', like ἐς χάριν τέλλεται (Pi.); perhaps this is the same word as (ἀνα-)τέλλω, -ομαι 'to rise, spring up': γένος ... φυτευθὲν ... τέλλετο (Pi.); see ►τέλλω 2.

•ETYM The corresponding expression περιπλομένων ἐνιαυτῶν [ptc.aor.] (Hom., Hes.) shows that τέλλομαι is a Ionic yod-present beside the Aeolic root present in ►πέλομαι, from IE k^wel-. See ►τέλομαι and ►τέλλω 3.

τέλλω 2 [v.] 'to make rise or spring, produce', intr. 'to rise, spring, originate', of constellations, plants, waters, etc. (Il., epic Ion. poet.), rarely med. 'to shoot up high' (Pi.). ◄IE $telh_2$- 'bear, endure'►

•DER 1. ἀνα-τολ-ή (also with ἐπ-, συν-) [f.] '(sun)rise, east' (μ 4 [ἀντολαί plur.]); ἐπιτολ-ή [f.] 'rise of a constellation' (Hp., Th., E., Arist., etc.); ἐντολ-ή [f.] 'assignment, order' (Pi., Hdt., Decr. apud D.), with -ίδιον, -ιος, -ικός, -ικάριος, -ιμαῖος, -εύς (late). 2. ἔνταλ-μα [n.] = ἐντολή (LXX, NT). 3. See ►τέλος.
•ETYM The forms τεῖλαι, τέταλμαι, τέταλκα were innovated from the present τέλλω after the pattern of στέλλω and other verbs. As a yod-present, *τέλ-ι̯ω 'to raise, rise' and 'to assign' belongs to ►ταλάσσαι, etc., thus originally $telh_2$-i̯e/o- (with loss of the laryngeal in accordance with Pinault's Law)? Or is it rather the same verb as ►τέλλομαι 1?

τέλλω 3 [v.] 'to achieve, perform', = τελέω. ◄IE k^wel- 'turn'►

τέλμα [n.] 'puddle, swamp, marsh, mire, mortar, dung' (IA). ◄?►
•DER τελματ-ώδης 'swampy' (Arist., D. S.), -ιαῖος 'forming a swamp, living in a swamp' (Arist.), -όομαι [v.] 'to become swampy' (Str.); also τελμίς, -ῖνος [m.] 'mire, dung' (EM, H.); cf. ῥηγμίς (to ῥῆγμα), also ►θίς.
•ETYM Unexplained; cf. on ►σταλάσσω. Arm. tełm, tiłm 'mire, dung' is a loan from Greek (Pedersen KZ 39 (1906): 374).

τέλομαι [v.] = ἔσομαι, ἔσται (Crete). ◄IE k^wel- 'turn'► •VAR 3sg. τέλεται, also with συν-. τένται 'id.' (Cyrene), from *τέλ-ται.
•DER Extension in -θ-: τελέθω [v.] 'to come up, appear, become, be' (Il., epic poet., also Ion. and Dor. prose); on the terminative meaning see Chantraine 1942: 327. Old primary formations ►τέλος 1 and τελετή [f.] 'ceremonial rite, consecration' (Pi., IA), with τελετ-άρχης [m.] 'head of the τελεταί' (late), τελετής = τελεστής 'who performs a consecration' (Hell.; cf. on Euphron. 1 [Coll. Alex. 177]); cf. Lat. cultus to colō, Skt. cáraṇa- [n.] also '(liturgical) action, religious ceremony' (to cárati, -te = colit, τέλεται); see also ►τέλλω 3 and τελέω (to ►τέλος 1).
•ETYM Identical with Aeol. ►πέλομαι, so originally 'I become' with future meaning. The form *τέλ-ται is an old athematic formation acc. to Meillet BSL 32 (1932): 198 (comparing ἔσται), but this is improbable. It was rather formed from τέλομαι after the synonymous pair ἔσομαι: ἔσται (Fraenkel Glotta 20 (1932): 89ff.). Syncope from τέλεται, as assumed by Szemerényi 1964: 165ff., is also improbable. The pair τέλος : τελετή recalls γένος : γενετή (where the latter may have a reflex of the laryngeal from $genh_1$-).

τέλος [n.] 1. 'end, limit, goal, fulfillment, accomplishment, determination; executive function, office; initiation, etc.' (Il.). 2. 'duty, tax, toll, expense, cost' (IA). 3. 'division of an army, troops, military unit, squadron of ships' (Il., IA). ◄IE $telh_2$- 'lift, carry'►

Very frequent as a second member, partly in back-formations of τελεῖν, e.g. ἀ-τελής 1. 'endless, unfulfilled, incomplete' (since ρ 546), opposite ἐν-τελής 'entire, complete' (Att., A.); 2. 'without duty, tax-free' (IA), with ἀτέλ-εια, -είη [f.] 'incomplete state' (Arist.), 'exemption from taxes' (IA); πολυ-τελής 'of many expenses, thriftless, costly' (IA); εὐ-τελής (referring to τελεῖν) 'easy to pay, cheap, small, economical' (IA); ἐκτελής 'complete, ripe' (Hes., A., E.) from ἐκ-τελέω (Il.). With a suffix -το-: ἀ-τέλεσ-τος (may also belong to τελεῖν) 'endless, incomplete' (Hom.), 'without initiation, uninitiated' (E., Pl.).
•DER 1. τέλειος (Il.), -εος (post-Hom.), -ηος (Crete), -εως (Cos) 'concerning the end or goal, etc., fulfilled, full-grown, etc.'; the formation could be *τελεσ-ι̯ος, *τελεσ-ϝος, or τελε-ι̯ος, and is much-discussed; hence τελε(ι)-ότης [f.] 'completeness' (Democr., Arist.), τελε(ι)-όω [v.] 'to complete, finish', med. and pass. From τελέω: τέλε-σις (ἀπο-, συν-, etc.) [f.] 'completion, conclusion' (Arist., Hell.); τέλεσμα [n.] 'payment, tax' (D. S., pap., inscr.), also to prefixed verbs (e.g. with ἀπο-) 'completion, goal, result' (Arist.); τελεσ-τής [m.] 'initiating priest' (late), Ὀρφεο-τελεστής (Thphr.); with συν- (to συν-τελέω) 'member of a union of tax-payers' (Cod. Just., etc.); -τικός 'concerning the initiating priest or the initiation' (Pl.), 'fit to perform' (Arist.), also with ἀπο-, ἐπι-, συν-; τελεσ-τήρ [m.] 'initiating priest'

(Troezen II[a]), -τωρ epithet of Apollo (AP), also as a PN; -τήρια [n.pl.] 'sacrifice for succeeded undertakings' (X., Ael.), -τήριον 'place of initiation' (Plu.); -τρα [n.pl.] 'costs of initiation' (Hell. inscr.); -τρια [f.] 'priestess of initiation' (Suid.). Lengthened present τελίσκω (συν-) = τελέω (Hell.). In compounds, τελέω occurs as a first member, e.g. τελεσι-ουργός 'completing the work', with -ία, -έω, -ημα (Pl., Arist.).
•ETYM Two etymologically different words seem to have merged in τέλος: in the sense of 'end, goal', τέλος can be derived from ►τέλομαι, ►πέλομαι as *'turning point (of the race-course, the field)'; beside it stands πόλος 'hinge, etc.', like γένος : γόνος. Given the broad root meaning of *k^wel- (cf. Lat. colō, Skt. cárati which also occur as 'to commit, complete, etc.'), a different original meaning may also be envisaged. In the sense of 'delivery, tax', τέλος fits excellently with ►τέλλω 2, ►τελαμών, ►ταλάσσαι, τλῆναι 'to lift, carry, yield', like φόρος 'tax' with φέρω. For τέλος as 'division of an army', connection with Skt. kúla- [n.] 'generation, family, crowd', Ru. čéljad 'crew' has been suggested, but this is neither formally nor semantically convincing. Frisk compares the German military expression Aushebung 'levy, conscription', in order to argue for derivation from the group of ταλάσσαι. In view of the striking similarity of the expressions τείνειν τέλος and τιταίνειν τάλαντα (Υ 101 εἰ δὲ θεός περ ἶσον τείνειεν πολέμου τέλος, Hes. Th. 638 ἶσον δὲ τέλος τέτατο πτολέμοιο, and Χ 209 καὶ τότε δὴ χρύσεια πατὴρ ἐτίταινε τάλαντα), Holwerda Mnem. 4:16 (1963): 337ff. connects both τέλος and τάλαντα with the balance and explains them as 'tongue of a balance', librae iugum. This seems very convincing. However, in the meaning 'tongue of a balance', τέλος must not be taken with τέλομαι, πέλομαι as "quod verti potest" (with H.), but with τάλαντα as 'levy'.

•DER τέλσας· στροφάς, τέλη, πέρατα 'turnings, ends' (H.).
•ETYM Probably corresponds to Hitt. gulš-^{zi} 'to carve, engrave, inscribe', Skt. karṣ- 'to pull, drag, plow', and Av. karš- 'id.'; the retention of -λσ- is regular if the accent was on the preceding syllable. Forbes Glotta 36 (1958): 260f. does not accept this phonological rule, and therefore reconstructs *τελ-τι̯-ο- from the root of τέλος, which is highly unsatisfactory and unnecessary.

Τέλφουσα [f.] name of a source in several places in Greece. ⊲IE *d^helb^h- 'dig'⊳ •ETYM Neumann explains the form as a ptc. of the root *d^helb^h- 'to dig', as in OHG bi-telpan, MoE delve, MoDu. delven 'id.'.

τέμενος [n.] 'separated piece of land, precinct, holy area' (Il., epic Ion.). ⊲IE *$temh_1$- 'cut, separate'⊳ •VAR Myc. te-me-no.
•COMP Rarely as a first member, e.g. τεμεν-ουρός [m.] 'guard of a τ.' (Cnidos).
•DER 1. τεμέν-ιος 'belonging to the τ.' (S., Chios IV[a]), -ία [f.] epithet of Ἑστία (Erythrae III[a]); ἐντεμέν-ιοι θεοί (Milete, Priene). 2. -ικός 'id.' (Anaxandr.[?], St. Byz., EM). 3. -ίτης [m.] epithets of various gods, e.g. Ἀπόλλων, Ζεύς (Th., inscr.), fem. -ῖτις name of a height near Syracuse (Th.). 4. -ίζω (also with ἐν-, Poll.) [v.] 'to establish or initiate a τ.' (Pl., D. H.), with -ισμα [n.] (D. C.); προ-τεμένισμα 'outer court of a temple' (Th. 1, 134, Hld.).
•ETYM Traditionally connected with τέμνω (e.g. Ζ 194 τέμενος τάμον, and cf. πᾶς ὁ μεμερισμένος τόπος τινὶ εἰς τιμήν κτλ. H.), which seems both formally and semantically satisfactory: a suffix -νος (like in κτῆ-νος, ἔρ-νος, etc.) was added to the disyllabic root *$temh_1$-. Manessy-Guitton IF 71 (1955): 14ff. (with extensive treatment and bibliography) does not accept a suffix -nos-, and considers Oriental origin: Akk. temennu 'foundation charter', Sum. temen 'id.'. The old connection with τέμνω would then be folk-etymological. This is not very probable.

•VAR Also ἔτεμεν· ἤμελγεν (H.), τέμει (Ν 707).
•ETYM Connected to an IE word for 'gulp, swallow' in Skt. ā-cā́mati 'to gulp', etc., MoIc. hvóma 'id.' (most recently by Strunk Glotta 68 (1990): 49-61).

τέμνω [v.] 'to cut, cut up, split, destroy' (Hom.). ⊲IE *$temh_1$- 'cut'⊳ •VAR Epic Ion., Dor. τάμνω (on τέμει Ν 707 see on ►τέμνοντα), aor. τεμεῖν, epic Ion., Dor. ταμεῖν, fut. τεμῶ, Ion. τεμέω; τμη- (Archim. τμᾱ-) in the aor. pass. τμηθῆναι, perf.pass. τέτμη-μαι (Od., Pi.) and act. -κα (Att.), verbal adj. τμητός (Att., A., S. [lyr.]), ἐΰ-τμητος (Hom.).
•COMP Very frequent with prefix, e.g. ἀπο-, ἐκ-, ἐν-, κατα-, περι-, συν-.
•DER A. With o-grade 1. τομή (Dor. -ά) [f.] 'cutting, cut, cut off part, stump' (Il.), also with ἀνα-, ἀπο-, ἐκ-, περι-, etc. (from ἀνα-τέμνω, etc.). 2. τόμος [m.] 'section, piece, part of a literary work, scroll of papyrus, volume' (com., inscr., pap.); often to the prefixed verbs with adjectival function, e.g. ἀπότομ-ος 'cut off, steep, craggy' (IA), with fem. -άς (D. S., J.), -ία [f.] 'cragginess' (Hell.). Adjective τομός 'incisive, sharp' (S., Pl.), often as a second member in univerbations, e.g. δρυ-τόμος 'cutting wood' (Il.). 3. τομ-εύς (ἐκ-, περι-, ὑπο-, ἀπο-) [m.] 'cutter, blade, knife', mathematical 'sector' (Trag. Adesp., Pl. Alc., X., Arist., Hell.); on τομεύς, τομή, τόμος and τμῆμα as mathematical (geometrical) terms see Mugler 1958-1959: s.vv. 4. τομ-ίας (usually with ἐκ-) [m.] 'who has been cut' (IA), with -ιαῖος (PMag. Par., gloss.). 5. τομ-άς [f.] 'excavation, clearance' (Arc. IV[a]). 6. -ίς [f.] 'knife' (LXX). 7. τόμ-ιον, plur. τὰ τόμ-ια 'cut victim, cut out parts of a victim, cut' (Att., etc.), τόμ-ιος = -ίας (pap.). 8. τομαῖος 'provided with a cut, cut off' (A., E.). 9. -ικός, only with ἀνα- (to ἀνατομ-ή) 'belonging to the anatomy' (Gal.); also with nominal first member, e.g. λατομ-ικός (to λατομ-ία, λατόμ-ος) 'belonging to a quarry, quarry-worker' (D. S.). 10. -άριον [n.] 'small volume' (Stob., Eust., EM). 11. Denominative verbs: -άω (only ptc. τομῶντι [dat.], of πήματι) 'needing cutting' (S. Aj. 582); ἐκ-, συν-τομίζω = ἐκ-, συν-τέμνω (PMag. Par., Suid.); ἐκτομ-άζω 'to castrate' (gloss.).
B. With zero grade < *tmh_1-: 1. τμῆ-μα (also with ἀπο-, περι-, etc.) [n.] 'section, part' (Hp., Pl., Att. inscr., etc.), -μάτιον (Eust.), -ματώδης (Hp. Loc. Hom.). 2. -σις (also with ἀπο-, ὑπο-, etc.) [f.] 'cutting, destroying' (Pl., Arist.). 3. -τήρ [m.] 'cutter' (Nonn.); -τής as an explanation of ἐκτομεύς (H.); -τικός (ἀνα-) 'cutting, stabbing' (Pl., Arist.). 4. -δην 'incising' (Η 262).

C. With full grade: τέμαχος [n.] 'piece, especially of salted fish', diminutive -ιον [n.] (IA), with formation like σέλαχος, στέλεχος, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 403 and 421). Hence τεμαχ-ίτης (ἰχθῦς) [m.] 'sliced and salted fish' (com., pap.), -ίζω (ἀπο-) [v.] 'to slice for salting, pickle', with -ισμός, -ιστός (late).
D. From the aorist ταμεῖν: ταμεσί-χρως 'cutting the skin' (Il.).
Cf. also ► τέμενος, ► ταμία, ► ταμίας, ► τάμισος.
•ETYM The nasal present τάμνω << PGr. tamnēmi < PIE tm-nehₗ-mi is original, as is a root aorist 3sg. etemet < hₗe-temhₗ-t, which was replaced by a thematic aorist ἔτεμον (Harðarson 1993b: 157-8, 160-1, 166). This situation was levelled in various ways in the dialects: Att. innovated with the present τέμνω, while epic Ion. and Dor. secondarily created the aorist ἔταμον. Extensive treatment by Forssman Glotta 44 (1966): 5ff. The monosyllabic τέ-τμη-ται, τμη-θῆναι, etc. agree with βέβληται, βληθῆναι et al. A pre-form τμᾱ- seems to be confirmed by the forms in Archim. and by τμᾶξαι (see ► τμήγω); on the other hand, τέτμηνται is unambiguous in Pi. I. 6, 22, and is also to be found in the lyrical parts of the tragedians (Forssman 1966: 158ff.). This means that the root was temhₗ- (thus also LIV² s.v.).
Celtic has the original athematic nasal present in OIr. tamnaid 'to cut off' < tm-n-(e)hₗ-; in Latin, this was also thematicized to (con-)temnō 'despise', perhaps via 'cut up, mutilate'. A nasal present is also found in Balto-Slavic, e.g. ORu. tjati, 1sg. tьnu 'to beat', Lith. tìnti, 1sg. tinù 'to sharpen'. See also ► τένδω and ► τμήγω.

τέναγος [n.] 'shallow water, shallow spot, shoal' (Pi., Hdt., Th., Arist.). ◄IE tenh₂g- 'shallow water'► •DER τεναγ-ώδης 'full of shoals, shallow' (Hell.), -ῖτις [f.] 'id.' (AP), -ίζω (Str., Plu.), -όομαι (Xenocr. apud Orib.) [v.] 'to form a τ., be shallow'.
•ETYM Formation like the opposite πέλαγος, and perhaps influenced by it. Bezzenberger BB 18 (1892): 267 compared Latv. tĩgas < tn̥h₂g- 'deep spot between two shallow places', but in view of the root structure, this seems highly unlikely.

τένδω [v.] 'to gnaw at' (Hes. Op. 524; v.l. τένθω [see τένθης]; conj. AP 9, 438, 1). ◄IE tend- 'split, cut off'► •ETYM An old primary thematic present; Latin has an iterative tondeō 'shave'. Celtic has several cognates, e.g. MIr. ro-s-teind 'he split it (the nut)', pres. teinnid, tennaid 'splits, breaks', tonn (< tond-ā) 'skin'. Traditionally connected with τέμνω as IE tem-d- (where one could assume that root-final d became hₗ), but this leaves the -m- unexplained. Fur. connects τένθης and thinks the verb is rather Pre-Greek.

τένθης [m.] 'glutton, gourmand' (com.). ◄PG►
•COMP As a second member in λιχνο-τένθης 'lickerish glutton' (Poll.).
•DER Primary verb τένθει [3sg.pres.] (v.l. Hes. Op. 524 acc. to sch. Ar. Pax 1009, Suid. s.v. τένθαις); τενθ-εύω [v.] 'to be a glutton' (Poll.), -εία [f.] 'gluttony' (Ar., Alciphr.); προτένθ-αι [m.pl.] 'participant of the celebration of Δορπία' (at the first day of the Apaturiae), also 'forestaller' (com.), sing. 'greedy' [adj.] (Ael.), with -εύω [v.] 'to forestall, anticipate' (Ar.), -εύομαι 'id.' (Eust.).
•ETYM Acc. to Bechtel 1921, 1: 310, τόνθων· παρὰ Κορίννῃ, ἐπὶ νωτιαίου (cod. νοτιβίου) κρέως τὸ ὄνομα 'spinal meat' (H.) also belongs here, which Frisk analyzes as belonging to *τόνθος, like γρόνθων : γρόνθος. Instead, we should envisage to connect τένθης with ► τένδω, in which case the variation δ/ θ points to Pre-Greek origin (Fur.: 196, 88). The words have nothing to do with the IE root tem(hₗ)-.

τενθίνοι [n.] · λίθοι πλατεῖς 'flat stones' (H.). ◄?► •ETYM Doubtful hypothesis by Mayrhofer Wien. Stud. 67 (1954): 162: it would originally mean *'hewed' > 'smooth', and belong to Skt. gandhá- [m.] 'smell' (originally *'to stab, blow, cut'). No etymology.

τενθρηδών, -όνος [f.] 'wasp, forest-bee' (Arist., Dsc.). ◄PG(V)►
•DER Also τενθρήνη [f.] 'id.' (Nic.), -ήνιον [n.] 'nest of a τ.' (Arist.), -ην(ι)ώδης 'like a honeycomb, perforated' (Hp., Plu., Democr. apud Ael.).
•ETYM See ► ἀνθρηδών, ἀνθρήνη, as well as ► πεμφρηδών, and perhaps also ► θρῆνος. The variant forms clearly show the Pre-Greek character of the word. Fur.: 196 suggests to connect ► τένθης.

τέραμνα [n.pl.] 'house, residence' (E., almost only lyr., also Artem.). ◄PG(V)► •VAR Also τέρεμνα; sing. -άμνῳ [dat.] (Maiist. 12). Here also τέραμνοι· στεγανοὶ, σκιαί, σκηνώματα 'covered, shadowy place, tents' and τέραμνος· κυψέλη 'vessel, chest, box' (H.).
•ETYM Previously connected with an IE word for 'beam, building, habitation' found in several European languages, e.g. U tremnu 'tabernaculo', Lat. trabs 'beam' (with taberna 'shed, habitation' from older trab-), OW treb 'living', Lith. trobà 'house, building', to which probably also belong Gm. words like OS thorp, OHG dorf 'village'. However, these words cannot be related to τέραμνα, which would presuppose a pre-form terh₂b-no-, while the other languages point to a root treb- (thus De Vaan 2008 and Matasović 2009). The form τέρεμνα, often explained by progressive vowel assimilation, rather points to substrate origin. We should definitely compare θεράπνη, which occurs both in the meaning 'servant, maid' and as 'house, residence' (see ► θεράπων). Because of the alternations α/ε and θ/τ, β/π, the word is Pre-Greek (likewise Fur.: 351).

•DER τεραμό-της [f.] 'softness' (Thphr.).
•ETYM For τεραμότης, cf. μειότης to μείων. The word is probably secondary to ἀτεράμων 'hard, tough', like πήμων to ἀπήμων (see ► πῆμα), or like τέραμνον· ἁπαλόν, ἑψανόν 'weak, boiled' (Phot., Suid.) to ἀτέραμνος. See ► ἀτέραμνος and ► τέρην.

τέρας [n.] 'sign, emblem; wonder, monster' (Il., epic poet., IA prose). ◄IE? kʷer- 'magical sign, omen'► •VAR Gen. -αος and -εος (Hdt.), plur. -αα (-ᾱ, -α), -εα (metrically lengthened τείρεα), Hell. -ατος, -ατα, etc.

•COMP Often as a first member, e.g. τερατο-λόγος 'telling wonders, wonderful' (Pl., Philostr.), with -ία (Isoc., etc.), also -έω [v.] (Arist.), -ημα (late); τερα[σ]-σκόπος (τερατο-) [m.] 'interpreter of signs' (Pi., trag.).
•DER 1. τερατ-ώδες 'miraculous, meaningful' (Att.), 2. -ίας [m.] 'performer of miracles' (D. S.), 3. -ικῶς 'wonderful' (Epicur.). 4. τεράσ-τιος 'bringing omens, of bad omens, remarkable' (Hell.; like Σεβάστιος to σεβασ-τός, also Γεράστιος). 5. τέρασμα [n.] 'miracle' (Plu.), cf. φάντασμα, etc. 6. Denominative verbs: a. τερατ-εύομαι (also with ἐπι-, ἀπο-, etc.) 'to talk marvels' (Att. Hell.), with -εία [f.] (Att. Hell.), -ευμα [n.] (Ar., D. H.); b) -όομαι [v.] 'to stare at as a wonder' (Timo); c) τεράζω (-ᾴζω Hdn. Gr.) [v.] 'to interpret signs' (A. Ag. 125 [lyr.]); 7. τερατ-ισμοί [m.pl.] 'wonders' (Lyd.). 8. Τειρεσίας [m.] PN, taken to stand for *Τερετ-ίας with metrical lengthening.
•ETYM Archaic word in -ας (cf. κτέρας, βρέτας, σέλας, etc.). Connected with ► πέλωρ (and τέλωρ) 'monster' (if this is from kʷer-ōr* by dissimilation; s.v.). Perhaps these words can be connected in turn with Lith. kēras 'magic, sorcery', Ru. čáry 'magic', Skt. kr̥- 'to make, perform', etc. (see LIV[2] s.v. kʷer-* '(ab)schneiden, schnitzen'); note that this presupposes that -ας was secondarily added within Greek, since the root is aniṭ.

τερείτης [m.] a musical instrument in Egypt (BGU 1125, 4). ◄LW Eg.?► •ETYM May be a loan from Egyptian.

τερετίζω [v.] 'to twitter, chirp, hum' (Phryn. Com., Arist., Thphr.). ◄ONOM► •COMP Rarely with συν-, ὑπο-.
•DER τερέτ-ισμα [n.] (Arist., Hell.), -ισμός [m.] (late) 'twittering, etc.'.
•ETYM It is generally assumed that this word is onomatopoeic.

τέρετρον [n.] 'auger, borer' (Od., Att. inscr., LXX, Plu.). ◄IE terh$_1$-* 'bore'► •DER Diminutive -τριον (Thphr.). With a suffix -ηδον-: τερηδών, -δόνος [f.] 'borer, caries' (Hp., Ar., Arist.), with -δονίζομαι [v.] 'be consumed by caries', -δονισμός [m.] (Dsc.); cf. τενθρηδών, ἀλγηδών, and see Gil Fernández 1959: 115.
•ETYM A primary instrument noun formed with the suffix -τρο- from the disyllabic root terh$_1$-* seen in τέρεσσεν· ἔτρωσεν, ἐτόρνωσε 'pierced' (H.), τερέσω (Eust.), zero grade τρῆσαι. In the same meaning, we find OIr. tarathar < -tro-*, Lat. tere-bra < -sr-*. See ► τετραίνω and ► τείρω.

τέρην [adj.] 'tender' (Il., epic poet.). ◄IE ter-n-* 'tender, soft'► •VAR Fem. -εινα, ntr. -εν.
•COMP As a first member in τερενό-χρως 'with tender skin' (Anaxandr., Opp.). Comparative τερέν-τερος (Antun.), τερενώ-τερος (Lyr. Adesp.), fem. τερεινο-τέρη (AP).
•ETYM An adjectival n-stem like ἔρσην, ἄρσην, identical with Sabin. terenum 'soft' (ascribed to Favorinus by Macrobius [late 4th c. AD]) save for the thematic vowel. Lat. tener, -era, -erum 'tender' also belongs here, if transformed from terenos* after tenuis (see De Vaan 2008). See ► τέρυς and ► τεράμων.

τερθρεύομαι [v.] 'to speak subtly' (D., Arist., Plu.). ◄?►
•DER τερθρ-εία [f.] 'sophistic reasoning, hairsplitting' (Isoc., Phld., D. H.), also as military expression = ἡ στρατεία ἡ ἐν τοῖς μέρεσιν καλουμένη (Phot., Suid.; similarly EM 753, 5), -εύμασι· φλυαρίαις 'nonsense' (H.), -εύς [m.] as a PN (Hermipp.).
•ETYM Can hardly be separated from τέρθρον 'topmost end, point', though a convincing argumentation for the semantic development is lacking. Prellwitz points to μετεωρολόγος; one could also compare MoHG spitzfindig , MoFr. pointiller 'to cavil'. One may also think of ► τονθορύζω 'mumble, speak inarticulately'.

τέρθρον [n.] 'top end (e.g. of the sail-yard), summit, highest point' (h. Merc. 322, Emp., Hp., E. Fr. 371, Poll.). ◄?►
•DER τέρθριοι (κάλοι) [m.pl.] 'ropes at the end of the sail-yard' (Ar. Eq. 440, Erot., Gal.), τερθρία πνοή (S. Fr. 333) = ὀπισθία πνοή. Glosses τερθρωτήρ· ὅπου ὁ πρῳρεὺς προορᾷ τὰ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ 'place whence the prow officer keeps watch of what happens at sea' (H.) and τεθρηδών· πρῳρεύς 'prow officer' (H.).
•ETYM A suffix -θρο- with the root τερ- 'reach the other side' has been assumed, but this root ended in -h$_2$*, thus the connection is impossible (see ► τέρμα).

τέρμα [n.] 'finish (of a race-course), end, highest point, supreme power' (Il., mostly epic poet.). ◄IE terh$_2$-* 'cross'► •COMP As a first member in τερμο-δρομέω 'to run to the finish' (Man.), τερματ-οῦχος H. as an explanation of βαλβιδοῦχος. Often as a second member, e.g. ἀ-τέρμων 'without an end, boundless' (A., E., Arist.), derived from τέρμων.
•DER 1. τέρμ-ιος 'at the end, final' (S.); cf. στόμιος from στόμα; 2. -ιεύς [m.] epithet of Zeus (Lyc.), after Πολι-εύς; 3. -ιόεις epithet of ἀσπίς (H 804), of χιτών (τ 242, Hes. Op. 537), mg. unclear (ποδηνεκής 'stretching to the feet', acc. to the ancients); formation like τειχιόεις; hence τέρμις· πούς 'foot' H.; on Myc. te-mi-dwe-te, -ta see Auro Jorro s.v.; 4. -άζω [v.] 'to limit' (Tab. Heracl., Thermon III[a]), with -αστῆρες [m.pl.] 'boundary officials' (Epid. III[a]); 5. -ατίζω (seldom prefixed with ἀπο-, ἐπι-) 'id.' (Str., S. E., Vett. Val.).
Besides τέρμων, -ονος [m.] 'end, boundary, edge' (A., E., Hell. and late prose); cf. μνῆμα to μνήμων, etc., with τερμ-όνιος 'at the end' (A. Pr. 117 [lyr.]), -ονίζω [v.] 'to delimit', -ονισμός 'delimitation' (Epid. III[a]); τερμο-σύνᾱ [f.] (Trag. Adesp. 509 [lyr.]), nonce formation.
•ETYM The n-stem in τέρμα and τέρμων corresponds to that of Lat. termen, -inis [n.], also ter-mō, -ōnis [m.] 'frontier stone, marking stone, frontier' (see De Vaan 2008 for further forms), as well as that of Skt. (RV) su-tárman- 'carrying over, saving' (of a ship); Lat. terminus and U termnom-e 'ad terminum' show thematic enlargements. The basic verb is preserved in Skt. tárati, tiráti (terh$_2$-*) 'to carry across, transfer'. See on ► τέρθρον, which is probably unconnected. On Hitt. tarma- 'nail, peg', see ► τόρμος.

τέρμινθος [f.] 'turpentine tree, Pistacia Terebinthus' (Hp., Arist., Thphr., LXX). ◄PG(S,V)►
•VAR Secondarily τερέβινθος, metathesized τρέμιθος (Nic. Th. 844).

•DER τερμίνθ-ινος (τερεβ-) 'belonging to the turpentine tree' (X., Diocl. Fr., Thphr.) fem. -ίς, haplological for -ινίς (Nic. Al. 300); τερεβινθ-ώδης 'rich in turpentine trees' (AP), -ίζω [v.] 'to be like turpentine' (Dsc.). Τερμινθεύς (Lyc.), Τερβ- (Milete II[a]) epithet of Apollo as a god of medicine, Τρεμιθοῦς TN (Cyrus; Ptol., St. Byz.).
•ETYM The younger form τερέβινθος was perhaps influenced by ἐρέβινθος (Güntert 1914: 138), rather than dissimilated from μ ... ν. Fur.: 219 assumes variation β/ μ. The word is Pre-Greek; this is confirmed by the suffix -ινθος.

τερμιόεις •VAR τέρμων. ⇒τέρμα.

τέρνακα [?] · τῆς κάκτου τοῦ φυτοῦ καυλόν 'stalk of the cactus plant' (H.). ◁PG?▷
•ETYM Formation like δόναξ, etc., explained by Frisk from earlier *τέρνον, -ος, which would have an e-grade compared to the zero grade in Skt. tr̥ṇa- [n.] '(blade) of grass, straw, herb', Go. þaurnus 'thorn', MoHG Dorn [m.], OCS trъnъ 'ἄκανθα' (from IE tr̥n-o-, -u-). A problem with the etymology of these words is that the root terh$_{1/3}$- 'to pierce' is seṭ. Etymologies between Greek and Sanskrit plant names are often wrong, and the word could be Pre-Greek.

τέρπομαι [v.] 'to satiate, refresh, delight' (Il.). ◁IE terp-* 'satiate'▷ •VAR Aor. ταρπῆναι, ταρφθῆναι, τερφθῆναι, epic also ταρπώμεθα [1pl.subj.], reduplicated τετάρπετο, τέρψασθαι, fut. τέρψομαι. Also active τέρπω, τέρψαι, τέρψω.
•COMP Also with ἐπι-, κατα- et al. Compounds: ἀ-τερπ-ής 'unpleasing' (Il.), opposite ἐπιτερπ-ής (h.Ap.); uncertain ἀτέρπου ὀιζύος (Z 285); ἄ-τερπνος 'ἄγρυπνος' (Stesich., Ibyc.). As a first member probably in τερπι-κέραυνος epithet of Zeus, 'who delights in thunder and lightning' (Hom., Hes.); τερψί-μβροτος 'rejoicing people' (Od., h.Ap., etc.).
•DER 1. τερπ-νός 'delightful, joyful' (θ 45 [v. l.]), with -νότης [f.] (LXX); recent superlative τέρπ-νιστος (Call.). 2. τέρψις [f.] 'delight, enjoyment' (Hes., mostly poet.). 3. τερπ-ωλή [f.] 'id.' (σ 37, Archil., Thgn., late prose). 4. τέρπεα or -η (dat. -εσι) [n.pl.] 'id.' (epigr. Itanos I[a]-I[p]). Proper names, e.g. Τέρπ-ανδρος, with short forms Τέρπης (AP), Τέρπων, name of satyrs (vase inscr.). Πολύ-τερπος (Corinth VI[a]; Threatte Glotta 45 (1967): 186ff.), patronymic Τερπ-ιάδης (χ 330); Εὐ-τέρπη, Τερψι-χόρη (Hes.).
•ETYM Skt. present tarpati 'to be satisfied' is an innovation (ep.) for earlier tŕ̥pyati, tr̥pṇóti, tr̥mpati (see Mayrhofer EWAia 1: 634f.); the Greek root present τέρπομαι may also be an innovation for an earlier yod-present. The intransitive aorist ταρπ-ῆναι probably replaces earlier τραπ-ῆναι (which fell together with the same formation from ►τρέπω 'to turn'). LIV[2] s.v. 1. terp- 'sättigen' compares the thematic root aor. Skt. á-tr̥p-at with Hom. ταρπώμεθα. Other cognates are Lith. tar̃pti, 1sg. tarpstù 'to prosper', and probably also the Gm. group of Go. þaurban, OHG durfan 'to need', which is semantically more problematic, but possible acc. to Seebold and Kümmel apud LIV[2].

•VAR Aor. τερσῆναι (P 519), -ήμεναι (ζ 98), act. τέρσαι (Theoc., Nic.), τέρσαιο (Nic.) [2sg.opt.med.], pres. τερσαίνω, -ομαι (Hell. epic), with 3sg.aor. τέρσηνε (P 529).

•ETYM Traditionally, τέρσομαι is identified with Go. ga-þairsan*, but only gaþaúrsana [pret.ptc. acc.sg.f.] (of handu = ἐξηραμμένην χεῖρα) is attested, which may also belong to ga-þaúrsnan 'ξηραίνεσθαι'. On the retention of -ρσ- < intervocalic -r̥s-*, see Manolessou and Pantelidis 2008. A zero grade yod-present is found in Skt. tŕ̥ṣyati, Go. þaursjan 'to thirst', and a causative tors-eie-* in Skt. tarṣáyati, Lat. torreō, OHG derran 'to scorch'. Greek has several nominal formations, e.g. ►ταρσός with τρασιά. In Greek, τέρσομαι was replaced by the denominatives αὐαίνομαι, -ω (from αὖος), ξηραίνομαι, -ω.

τέρυς [adj.] 'soft, weak' only in τέρυ· ἀσθενές, λεπτόν 'weak, small' (H.), τέρυας ἵππους· οὕτω λέγονται ὅσοι ἀδδηφάγοι εἰσί. ἔνιοι τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς 'τ. horse are called those which are greedy; some: the weak ones' (H.). ◁IE ter-u-* 'tender, weak'▷ •DER Besides τερύνης· τετριμμένος ὄνος, καὶ γέρων ἢ δυσανάληπτος γέρων 'beaten off donkey, also an old man, who is in a bad shape for recovery'; τερύσκεται· νοσεῖ, φθίνει 'is ill, declines'; τερύσκετο· ἐτείρετο 'was tired off' (H.).
•ETYM The gloss τερύνης may be compared with Skt. táruṇa-, Av. tauruna- 'young, tender', from IE teru-no-*. Beside disyllabic τερυ-, we find τρυ- in ►τρύω; cf. also ►τιτρώσκω. An s-stem is seen in κυκλο-τερής 'rounded' (cf. ►κύκλος), for the meaning of which cf. Hdt. 4, 36: τὴν γῆν ἐοῦσαν κυκλοτερέα ὡς ἀπὸ τόρνου 'the earth being round, as if from a τ.'.

•VAR Also τρέχνος. Cypr. te-re-ki-ni-ja 'fruit', if this stands for τέρχνια.
•ETYM Formation like ἔρνος, κτῆνος, etc. Niedermann IF 26 (1909): 46f. pleaded for connection with τρέχω 'to run'. In τέρχνεα = ἐντάφια 'ptng. to burial' (H.), we may be dealing with a specialization of the meaning 'fruits'; cf. καρποί, κάρπωμα, -ωσις, which also denote fruits as offerings, κάρπωσις· θυσία Ἀφροδίτης ἐν Ἀμαθοῦντι 'sacrifice for Aphrodite in Amathous' (H.). Fur.: 351 compares ταρχάνιον· ἐντάφιον, and therefore suggests a Pre-Greek word.

•VAR Att. τέτταρες, Ion. Arc. Hell. τέσσερες, Dor. NWGr. τέτορες, Aeol. (Hom.) πίσυρες, Lesb. πέσ(σ)υρες, Boeot. πέτταρες.
•DIAL Myc. qe-to-ro-we /k^{w}etr-ōwes/ 'with four ears'.
•COMP As a first member in Hom. τεσσαρά-κοντα, Att. τετταρά-κοντα, Ion. Hell. τεσσερά-κοντα, Dor. τετρώ-κοντα 'forty'; also in τεσσαρά-βοιος 'worth four oxen' (Ψ 705), etc. Very frequent τετρα-, e.g. τετρά-κυκλος 'four-wheeled' (Hom., etc.), τετρα-κόσιοι, Dor. -κάτιοι 'four hundred'.
•DER Hence the ordinal τέταρτος, epic also τέτρατος, Boeot. πέτρατος 'fourth' with τεταρτ-αῖος (Theoc. τετόρτ-αιος) 'arriving at the fourth day' (IA), as a kind of fever (msc., scil. πυρετός) 'Quartana'. Collectives: τετράς (Boeot. πετράς) [f.] 'period of four days, quaternary', usually 'fourth day of the month' (h. Merc., Hes.); τετρακτύς, -ύος [f.] 'quaternary' (Pythag.). Numeral adverb τετράκις (ε 306; Boeot. π-), post-

Hom. also -κι 'four times'. Further adverbs: τέτρα-χα, -χῆ, -χόθι, -χῶς, etc. (IA); also -χθά (Hom.); adjective τετραξός (Arist.), -ασσός (late pap.), like διξός, δισσός, etc.
•ETYM The inflection of the IE numeral for 'four' can be reconstructed on the basis of the forms found in the separate languages. Among the Greek forms, the following are important for the reconstruction: nom.pl. _*k^wetuor-es_ in τέτορες (with τ instead of σσ/ττ after τέτρασι); identical with this are Arm. č'ork', ToA śtwar, ToB śtwer, Skt. catvā́rah (with ā < o by Brugmann's Law); Lat. quattuor has a secondary a in the initial syllable. Then, the acc.pl. _*k^wetur-ns_ in πέσυρας, corresponding to Skt. catúraḥ, Lith. keturì, Go. fidur- in fidur-dogs 'τεταρταῖος, of four days'; from this stem form, a new nom. πέσυρες was created (it has been assumed that πίσυρες is a variant of this form with reduced vowel). The loc.pl. _*k^wetur-su_ (Skt. catúrṣu) is continued in the dat. τετράσι. The ordinal _*k^wetu̯r-to-_ in τέτρατος, τέταρτος corresponds to Lith. ketvir̃tas, ToA śtärt, ToB śtarte beside Skt. caturtháḥ. The e-grade of τέσσερες may be compared with that in the Balto-Slavic collective, Lith. ketverì, OCS četverъ, < IE _*k^wetueres_; its origin is unknown (τέσσερες did not arise from τέσσαρες by vowel assimilation). For τετρώκοντα, Kortlandt MSS 42 (1983): 100 assumes that the laryngeal feature that arose from the initial _*d-_ of the second member was colored to _*h_3_, because of the preceding _*u_ in _*k^weturdkomt_. Lillo MSS 49 (1988): 71-73 assumes that in Doric, the τ of the accus. was extended to the nom., giving τέτορες. See ►τράπεζα and ►τρυφάλεια.

τετανός •VAR τέτανος. ⇒τείνω.

τέταρος [m.] 'pheasant' (Ptol. Euerg. 2 J). ◄LW Orient.►
•VAR τατύρας· ὁ φασιανὸς ὄρνις 'id.' (H.; also in Pamphil. apud Ath. 9, 387a).
•ETYM LSJ remarks that the word is a loan from the Orient, referring to MP tedzrev 'pheasant'. They further compare Lith. tetervà 'black grouse'; cf. on ►τέτραξ. Ath. 14, 654c states that τέταρος was imported from Media.

τετίημαι [v.] 'to be sad' (Il.). ◄?►
•VAR Perfect denoting the result of an event, in 2du. τετίησθον (Θ 447), further only the ptc. τετιημένος (Hom., Hes. Th. 163), also act. τετιηώς, dat. -ότι plur. -ότες (Il.).
•ETYM Isolated within Greek, but possibly related to the root _*k^wei-_ 'to perceive, care'. LIV^2 s.v. assumes that the Greek perfect, with original meaning *'am aware', was built on the basis of an unattested aorist _*ἐ-τίην_ 'noticed'. For the meaning, cf. from the same root Lat. cūra 'anxiety, care' < _*k^wois-h$_2$-_. Within Greek, cf. ►τηρέω.

τετμεῖν [v.] 'to find, reach, obtain' (Il., epic). ◄?►
•VAR Ind. τέτμεν, ἔτετμεν, τέτμον, subj. τέτμῃ, etc.
•DER Here perhaps the unclear form τέμει (N 707), cf. Chantraine 1942: 309.
•ETYM A reduplicated aorist like πε-φν-εῖν, among others. Without a convincing etymology. There is no convincing semantic argumentation for the formally obvious connection with τέμνω 'cut'. ToAB täm- 'to be born', caus. 'to generate', which was first compared by Van Windekens Phil. Stud. 11: 175f., deviates strongly in meaning as well. For argumentation in favor of this connection, see LIV^2 s.v. tem- 'erreichen'.

τετραίνω [v.] 'to pierce, perforate' (A. [lyr.], Hdt.). ◄IE _*terh$_1$-_ 'rub'► •VAR Aor. τετρῆναι (Hom.), τετρᾶναι (Att. inscr.), med. τετρήνασθαι (Ar., Gal.), pass. τετρανθῆναι (Lyc., AP), fut. τετρανέω (Hdt.), -νῶ (IV^a); further aor. τρῆσαι (Hp., Pl., Hell. and late), med. -σασθαι (Gal.), pass. -θῆναι (Trypho apud Ath., Gp.), fut. τρήσω (Lyc.), perf. med. τέτρημαι (IA), with secondary pres. τιτράω, τίτρημι, τιτραίνω (Hell. and late), to which aor. τιτρᾶναι (Thphr.).
•COMP Mostly with prefix, especially δια-, συν-.
•DER 1. τρη-τός 'pierced' (Il.), ἄ-τρη-τος (Pl., Arist.), from the prefixed compounds e.g. παράτρητος (medic.). 2. τρῆμα (διά-, παρά-, ἔκ-) [n.] 'hole, opening, eye of a needle, dot on a die' (IA), with -άτιον (Hero), -ατώδης 'perforated', -ατόεις 'id.' (AP), -ατίζω [v.] 'to dice', -ατίκτας (Dor.), -ατῖται [pl.] 'dice-player' (Sophr., Poll., H.). 3. τρῆσις (διά-, σύν-, etc.) [f.] 'perforation, opening, hole' (IA).
•ETYM The verbal forms τέτρημαι, τρητός, τρῆμα correspond with βέβλημαι, βλητός, βλῆμα; τέτμημαι, τμητός, τμῆμα, etc. The disyllabic root is preserved in τέρε-τρον, like in βέλε-μνα. The root present of this root is preserved in Lat. terō 'rub'. The presents τετραίνω, τετρανέω, as well as the aorist τετρᾶναι, must be innovations, apparently after the verbs in -αίνω. The comparison with Lith. trinù 'rub' is not reliable, given the strong productiviy of nasal presents in Lithuanian. Also remarkable in τετραίνω, etc. is the ε-vocalism of the reduplication syllable, which seems to have been taken from the perfect and fits better for an aorist than for a present; cf. the incidental aorists τέτορεν, τετορήσας (see ►τορεῖν). Cf. ►τείρω.

τέτραμος •VAR τετραμαίνω. ⇒τρέμω.

•VAR Also -ακος, -αγος.
•DER τετράζω [v.] 'to cackle' (Alex. Mynd.). Also τέτριξ, -ιγος [f.] (Arist.), identification uncertain (Thompson s.v.). Further glosses: τετράων· ὄρνις ποιός 'kind of bird' (Lat. tetrāō Plin.), τετράδων· ὀρνεόν τι. Ἀλκαῖος 'id. (Alc.)' , τετραῖον· ὀρνιθάριόν τι. Λάκωνες 'small bird [Lac.]'; τατύρας· ὁ φασιανὸς ὄρνις 'pheasant', etc. (see ►τέταρος).
•ETYM For the suffix of τέτραξ, -ιξ, cf. the bird names ►κόραξ, ►πέρδιξ, et al. Similar birdnames are Lith. tetervà 'blackcock, gray hen', tẽtervinas 'blackcock, bustard', Ru. téterev 'blackcock', ON þiðurr 'capercailzie', Skt. tittirá- 'partridge'. Originally onomatopoeic.

τετρακίνη [f.] 'θρίδαξ' (Hippon. fr. 168 M). ◄LW Phr.?► •ETYM Cleitarchus identified the word as Phrygian. Complicated explanation by Haas Ling. Balkan. 2 (1960): 57f.

τέττα ⇒τατᾶ.

τέττιξ, -ῑγος [m.] 'tree-cricket, cicada' (Il.); metaph. a hair-pin with the shape of a cicada (Att.). ◄ONOM► •VAR Gen. also -ῑκος (Hdn. Gr.).
•COMP As a first member in τεττιγο-μήτρα [f.] 'subterranean larva of the cicada' (Arist.).
•DER τεττίγιον (H. s.v. κερκώπη), also name of a coin (Delos III[a]); τεττιγ-όνιον [n.] designation of a small mute cicala (Arist., Plin.), with suffix after ἀηδ-, χελιδ-όνιον; -ότης [f.] 'state of a cicada' (comm. Arist.), -ώδης 'like a cicada' (Luc.).
•ETYM Onomatopoeic; cf. τιτίζω s.v. ►τιτιγόνιον and Gil Fernández 1959: 130f., 190.

τευθίς [f.] 'kind of cuttlefish' (Semon., Ar., Thphr.). ◄PG?(V)►
•VAR Gen. -ίδος, -ῖδος. Variant θεῦτιν [acc.] (Hippon. ex H.). Also τεῦθος [m.] a bigger kind of cuttlefish (Arist.); τευθιάς [f.] (Philox.).
•DER τευθίδ-ιον [n.] (com.), -ώδης 'like a τ.' (Ath.); details in Thompson 1947 s.v. The TN Τευθίς (Arcadia, -έα Achaia) has also been compared.
•ETYM Several attempts have been made to explain the word in IE terms, but none of them convinces: Pok. 264f. posited IE d^{h}eu-d^h-, comparing Skt. dódhat- 'shatter, turbulent, raging', etc., and assumed a meaning "making the water muddy, entangling" for Greek, which hardly makes sense. Schindler KZ 81 (1967): 71, with some reservations, gives the same reconstruction and assumes an original color term, like in the plant name τεύθριον = πόλιον, ἐρυθρόδανον. Semitic etymologies have been proposed by Lewy 1895: 18, Lewy RhM 80 (1931): 108, and Grimme Glotta 14 (1925): 17.
The word could be Pre-Greek, in view of the variant and the meaning. Tovar MSS 10 (1957): 71-83 convincingly argued that Myc. te-u-ta-ra-ko-ro should be interpreted as τευθρ-αγόρος 'collector of orchils', a plant from which colors were produced, Roccella tinctoria. See ►τεῦτλον.

τεύθριον [n.] plant name, 'tree-germander' (Dsc.). ◄?►

•DER Further τευτάζω (also med.), perf. τετεύτακα [v.] 'to be regularly occupied with sth.' (com., Pl.), also -άσσω (Orac. in Ath. Mitt. 25, 399); thence τευτασμός· στραγγεία 'hesitation, loitering' (H.).
•ETYM From *τεύμα (or *τεῦμα?), which might be identical with Av. šiiao-man- [n.] 'deed, work', IE kieu-mn-. The primary verb is seen in ►σεύομαι. The form τευτάζω was probably extended from a verb in -τω, -τάω, which ultimately belongs to ►σεύομαι as well.

•DER τευτλ-ίον (Ar., Diocl. Fr., Thphr., pap.; also with initial σ-); -ίς (Thphr., Diph.); Τευτλοῦσσα [f.] "beet-island", island on the coast of Caria (Th.).
•ETYM The proposal by Tovar MSS 10 (1957): 77ff. to derive it from IE d^{h}eu- 'walk, run' and assume an original meaning 'juicy' (cf. s.v. ►τευθίς) should be rejected. Acc. to Frisk, the interchange τ-/σ- may represent an artificial Atticism or Ionicism. However, it may instead be a Pre-Greek variation, representing a palatalized dental *t^y.

τεύχω [v.] 'to manufacture, accomplish, produce', of manual labor, building and cutting; 'to prepare', often of food and drinks; 'to arrange, cause' (Il., epic poet.). ◄IE d^{h}eug^h- 'hit the mark, meet'►

Τυχίος [m.] PN, who fashioned the shield of Aias (H 220: Τυχίος κάμε τεύχων).
•ETYM Beside the thematic root present τεύχω (aor. τεῦξαι) 'manufacture', Greek has the nasal present τυγχάνω (with them. aor. τυχεῖν) in the more original meaning 'hit the mark, meet'. Both verbs are derived from the root d^{h}eug^h- 'hit', to which belong the Skt. stative duhé 'gives milk', Go. daug 'is fit' (see LIV^2 s.v. for further cognates). See ►τυγχάνω.

(IA), with -ασμα, -ασμός; c) -όω (προ-) [v.] 'to initiate into an art' (Gal.), with -ωσις.

τήθεα [n.pl.] designation of a sea-animal, probably a 'sea-squirt, ascidia' (P 747). ◄PG(V)► •VAR Also -η (Nic., Poll.), sing. -ος (Arist. Fr. 309), also τήθυον (v.l. -εον; Arist.).
•DER Diminutive τηθυνάκια [pl.] (Epich. 42). Frisk comments that the form is doubted by the editors, but that the form, if correct, can be derived from *τηθύνη (cf. χελύνη) after ὀστράκια et al. With some reserve, one may connect the sea-goddess Τηθύς.
•ETYM Extensive treatment by Kalén 1918: 20ff., 98ff.: starting from the form τήθυον, he assumes earlier *θή-θυον and connects the word with θῆσθαι 'to suck' and *θύον 'bag' (whence ►θύλακος). This explanation is nonsensical and typical of older Greek etymologies. Probably a Pre-Greek word, with variation υ/ε. On the facts, see Thompson 1947 s.v. ►τήθυον.

With zero grade: 5. τακ-ερός 'melting, liquid, soft, tender' (Hp., com.; cf. φανερός, σφαλερός, etc.), with -έρωσις [f.] (medic.); also -ηρός 'id.' (Dsc.). 6. Uncertain τάκων (-ᾰ-), -ωνος [m.] name of spiced food, 'sausage, lump of meat'? (Poll. 6, 53 from Crates Com.).
•ETYM The forms τέτηκα (τέτᾱκα) and τᾰκῆναι point to a root teh₂k-* (cf. LIV² s.v.). Leaving aside the root-final -κ- of Greek, we may compare verbs in other languages: OCS tajǫ, tajati 'to melt', with talъ 'melting, fluid, τακερός'; further, Arm. tʿa-nam, aor. tʿa-cʿi 'to moisten', -cʿay 'to get wet'; OIr. tám 'death, pest'. Latin has a root enlargement in $-b^h$-*: tābēs [f.] 'corruption, putrefaction', tābēsco 'to melt, decay', etc.

τῆλε [adv., prep.] 'in the distance, far away' (Il., epic). ◄IE *$k^wel$- 'far'►

•COMP Very often as a first member, e.g. τηλε-κλειτός 'far-famed' (epic Il.), PN Τηλέ-μαχος, originally "fighting from afar" (opposite ἀγχέ-μαχος; also Arc. Τηλί-μαχος after ἀγχί-μαχος).
•DER Adverbs τηλ-οῦ, -όθι 'id.', -όθε(ν) 'from, in the distance', -όσε 'in the distance, far away'; also τηλε-δαπός 'from a far country, far off, distant' after ποδ-απός, ἀλλοδαπός, etc. (all Il., epic); unclear is τήλεμος (Theognost. Can.), perhaps after τῆμος, ἧμος? Comparative forms τηλο-τάτω (Od.), -τέρω (Hp., Arat.), -τερος (AP), τήλιστα (Orph.; nonce formation after ἄγχιστα). Further Aeol. πήλυι (-οι) [loc.] = τῆλε, τηλοῦ, with Boeot. Πειλε-στροτίδας PN.
•ETYM Harðarson KZ 108 (1995): 205f. proposed that it is a locative *$k^w\bar{e}lh_1$- from the root of ►πέλομαι. It is doubtful, however, that the word contained a laryngeal. For the semantics, cf. τέλος 'end, goal, etc.' from the same root.

τηλία [f.] 'table or board with an elevated edge', of the table of a baker, the stage on which game-cocks fight, a gaming table (com., Aeschin., Arist., pap.), also of a sieve (Ar. Pl. 1037, sch. σηλία); unclear Ar. V. 147 (of a flue?). Uncertain σαλ[ία] 'sieve' (Suppl. Epigr. 1, 414, Crete V-IV[a]). On the mg. Chantre RPh. 68 (1994): 77-86. ◂PG(V)▸ •ETYM A technical expression in -ία, like σχεδία, κλισία, ἑστία, etc. In the sense of 'hoop of a sieve', τηλία and σηλία are often connected with σήθω, δια-ττάω 'sieve', but the derivation is unclear. In the meaning 'table, board', the connection with words for 'plane, surface, etc.' (Skt. tala- [n.] 'plane', Lat. tellūs 'ground') is still given by Pok. 1061, but this cannot be upheld as Greek would have a lengthened grade formation. Also, as Scheller 1951: 62ff. remarks, the special character of the table is not sufficiently accounted for in this way. Therefore, Scheller considers the meaning 'hoop of a sieve' or 'sieve' as original, and assumes a development to 'table (for gaming, baking, etc.)'. For such a technical word, substrate origin is likely, and since the variation τ/σ is typical for Pre-Greek words, we must assume such an origin.

The form seems to correspond with MInd. tārisa- 'such a one, of that kind', but this is derived from Skt. tādṛ́śa- (Mayrhofer EWAia s.v. tādṛ́ś-). Cf. ►πηλίκος and ►ἡλίκος.

•ETYM This plant name has no certain explanation. The older dictionaries compare Skt. tāla- [m.] 'wine-palm', Lat. tālea 'stave, cutting', OLith. talokas 'adult daughter, younger girl', but such wild guesses have been abandoned in more recent days (cf. Mayrhofer EWAia and De Vaan 2008).

τηλύγετος [adj.] epithet of children of unknown mg. and origin (Il., epic). ◂GR▸ •ETYM The ancients connected both τέλος 'end' ('latecomer', sch. For the formation, cf. ►ἀτρύγετος and ►Ταΰγετος. Janda Glotta 66 (1988): 20-25 connects the second member with ►λύζω 'hiccup, swallow' as 'in der Ferne schluchzend'; not very convincing. Vine 1998: 64-66 connects λυγρός 'painful' and analyzes the word as *τηλε-λύγετος 'having mysery/pain at a distance'.

Backformation τημελής, -ές (H., Phot., Suid.), -έως, -ῶς (Aglaias, Max. Tyr.).
•ETYM Without a certain explanation. The semantic and formal similarity with μέλομαι gave rise to several unsuccessful attempts to connect τημελέω etymologically. Not related to Lith. tẽmyti(s) 'note, imprint in the memory' (a Slav. LW), Ru. tjámit' 'understand'. Pisani RILomb. 77 (1943-44): 564ff. suggested that τημέλεια (whence τημελέω) arose from *τηλε-μέλεια by syllabic dissimilation, orig. "to care from afar", which is semantically unconvincing.

Beside τῆμος, τᾶμος stands the relative ἧμος, ἆμος 'as, while' (Il., epic poet., rare in Hp. and Hdt.).

τήνελλα a ritual exclamation, taken from the cult of Demeter in Paros by Archilochos, acc. to sch. Ar. Av. 1764, and used in a poem (τήνελλα καλλίνικε χαῖρ' ἄναξ Ἡράκλεες [Fr. 119]). ◂?▸

Also 7. ἐπιτηρ-ία [f.] 'attention, care' (Pamphyl.; from ἐπιτηρ-έω). 8. τηρός [m.] 'guardian' (A. Supp. 248; probably back-formation).
•ETYM Since the hapax τηρός is most probably a back-formation, the prehistory of τηρέω remains obscure. Relationship with Skt. cā́yati [v.] 'to observe, feel shame or anxiety' and OCS čajǫ, -ati 'ἐλπίζω, προσδέχομαι, προσδοκῶ' < IE k^{w}ēi-* has been assumed, but this is unsatisfactory, as Greek shows no trace of the root-final -i-*. On Skt. cāra- 'messenger, watcher', which was earlier wrongly identified with τηρός, see Mayrhofer KEWA s.v. (it belongs to car- 'be around' = πέλομαι).

•ETYM The petrified ntr. accus. of an adjective (cf. τρί-ετες), built on ϝέτος and the demonstrative ḱi-* (see ►ἐκεῖ). The expected form κι-(ϝ)ετες seems to have been replaced at an early (pre-Mycenaean) date by ki̯āwetes, after the precursor of semantically related σήμερον, τήμ-, σάμ-, giving Myc. za-we-te, Class. σῆτες, τῆτες, τᾶτες.

τηΰσιος [adj.] 'idle, vain' (γ 316 = ο 13, h. Ap., Alcm., B., A. R., Theoc.). ◄IE teh$_2$-(iu-)* 'thief'► •VAR Dor. ταΰσιος; also ταύσιμον· μάταιον 'idle' (H.) (for -σιον?).
•ETYM An isolated poetic adjective. If it originally meant 'deceptive', it belongs to a word for 'thief' in Skt. tāyú-, Av. tāiiu-, which are derived from a primary verb preserved in Hitt. tāi̯e/a-^{zi} 'to steal', OCS tajiti, 1sg. tajǫ 'to hide, conceal'. Neumann 1961: 65 connected the gloss τεγοῦν· Λυδοὶ τὸν ληστήν (H.) with this root, but it is now supposed that i̯* would give Lyd. d, not γ, in this position. The suffix -σιος may have been added directly to a noun *τᾶΰς after the pattern of δημόσιος from δῆμος (cf. also synonymous ἐτώ-σιος), so an intermediate form *ταῦ-τᾶ(ς) seems unnecessary. See ►τητάομαι.

•DER Also the HN Τίγρης, -ητος [m.] (Hdt., X., Arr., etc.), also Τίγρις, -ιος, -εως, -ιδος (Arist., Plb., Str., Plu.).
•ETYM Oriental LW, first from Iranian. Acc. to Varro (L. L. 5, 100), the word is Armenian, while acc. to D. P., Eust., and others, it is Median, with the original mg.

'arrow'. This means that it can be equated with Av. tigri- [m.] 'arrow', as well as tiγra-, OP tigra- 'pointed' (cf. Skt. tigmá- 'id.'), etc. (from the root of Greek ► στίζω). On the hydronym, which is OP tigrā, we may compare Varro ("vehementissimum flumen") and D. P. ("ποταμὸς ὤκιστος ἁπάντων" 'the fastest river of all'). We have to reckon with folk-etymological adaptation of a foreign word to Iranian (cf. MP, Akk. Diqlat 'Tigris'). From Greek came Lat. tigris, etc.

τιθαιβώσσω [v.] epic word of agriculture, originally popular: of bees (ν 106 'to collect honey'?), of hens (Nic. Th. 199 'to brood, feed, tend'?), watering the field (Lyc. 622 'to make fertile, nourish'?), of a quiver (Antim. in PMilan. 17, 37 'to stuff, store up'?). ◄?►

•ETYM Formation in -ώσσω, perhaps reduplicated. Fur.: 209 compares Lyc. tideimi- 'son, child', CLuw. titaimma/i- 'id.', and assumes a Pre-Greek word. This conclusion is mistaken, as the Anatolian words have a secure IE etymology: the root is *d^heh_1- 'to suck'.

τιθασός [adj.] 'tamed, domestic, cultivated, mild' (A. Eu. 356 [lyr.], S. Fr. 866, Pl., Arist.). ◄PG(S)►

(Plu.), -εύματα [n.pl.] 'arrangements for taming' (Porph.), -ευτής [m.] (Ar.), -εύτωρ [m.] (Opp.) 'tamer, domesticator', -ευτικός [adj.] 'fit for taming, easy to tame' (Arist.); ἀ-τιθάσευτος 'untamed, wild' (Hell.), also ἀ-τίθασος 'id.' (Ph.). Backformation τιθαὶ ὄρνιθες (Arat. 960), τιθὰς ὄρνις (AP 9, 95).

•ETYM The word τιθασός differs from other words in -ασος in its oxytone accent and in its adjectival function (these are probably interconnected). The traditional connection of τιθασός with θῆσθαι 'suck', τιθήνη 'nurse', etc. must be rejected, not only because of the weak semantics, but also because words in -ασος generally have Pre-Greek origin.

Further derivatives are: 1. θῆμα [n.], almost only from prefixed verbs, e.g. ἀνάθη-μα [n.] 'sth. positioned, votive offering' (Od.), with -ματικός (Plb.). 2. θέμα (with zero grade) [n.] 'proposition, input, theme, etc.' (Arist., Hell.), with θεμ-άτιον, -ατικός, -ατίτης, -ατίζω, -ατισμός; ἀνά-, ἐπί-θεμα, etc. from ἀνα-, ἐπι-τίθημι, etc. 3. θημών, -ῶνος [m.] 'pile' (ε 368, Arist., Opp.), θημων-ιά [f.] 'id.' (LXX et al.). 4. θέ-της [m.], as a simplex only in Is. 10, 24 'who pawns' and Pl. Cra. 389d (nonce formation), especially frequent in univerbations, e.g. ἀγωνο-θέ-της (: ἀγῶνα θεῖναι) 'arbiter at a contest' (IA), with -θέτις, -θετικός, -θετέω, -θεσία. 5. θετήρ· τολμητής, πράκτης 'who wages' (H.), διαθε-τήρ 'arranger' (Pl. Lg., Them.); διαθέ-της Hdt. et al., ἀγωνο-θε-τήρ = -της (verse-inscr. Catana). 6. θετός 'adopted' (Pi., IA); often of the prefixed verbs, e.g. ἐπίθε-τος 'added, artificial' (Att.); θητόν· βωμόν 'step, base, altar' (H.). 7. θετικός (to θέσις) 'belonging to a θέσις, i.e. concerning adoption, disputation, etc.' (Arist., Hell.); συνθε-τικός (to σύνθεσις), etc. 8. -θε-σίαι, -ία in συν-, ἐκ-, ἐπι-θεσία(ι) 'agreement, assignment, etc.' (Il.).

•ETYM This important inherited verb was inherited from the PIE root *d^heh_1-, which assumes a wide range of meanings: 'put, lay down, make, create, etc.'. The following survey is limited to forms and words that are directly relevant for Greek. The active root aorist in Boeot. ἀν-έθε̄ corresponds to Skt. ádhāt, OP adā, Arm. ed, IE h_1e-d^heh_1-t. The κ-aorist θῆκε (Hom.) is also found in OLat. fēced, perhaps already Myc. te-ke (meaning uncertain), from IE d^heh_1-k-et. The middle root aorist ἔθετο is matched by Skt. adhita, from IE h_1e-d^hh_1-to. The reduplicated athematic present τίθημι is found in Skt. dádhāmi, Av. daδąmi < IE d^hi-d^heh_1-mi, etc., where the Greek reduplication vocalism is probably older (IIr. may have taken its dá- from the 3pl.). The verbal adj. θετός is formally identical with Skt. hitá- (for dhitá-*) 'put, designated, fit, etc.', as well as with Lat. fēced from IE (-)d^hh_1-tó-; the gloss θητόν [acc.sg.] is formally identical with Av. OP dāta- [n.] 'law', Lith. dė̃tas 'put'. Greek θῆμα formally corresponds to Skt. dhā́man- [n.] 'seat, place, statute, law, etc.', Av. dāman- [n.] 'place, creation', IE d^heh_1-mn̥; θετήρ, to Skt. dhātár-, Av. dātar- [m.] 'contriver, creator', Lat. con-ditor 'contriver, founder'. The perfect τέθη-κ-α is a Greek innovation (like ἕστηκα), in opposition to Av. daδa, Skt. dadháu. The forms τέθεικα, τέθειμαι were created analogically after εἶκα, εἷμαι. Details on the Greek morphology and inflection are found in Schwyzer: 686ff., 741, 761f., 774f., and 782. Cf. further forms with comments in LIV² s.v. *d^heh_1- 'stellen, legen, setzen; herstellen, machen'.

From the present stem τικτικόν (φάρμακον) [n.] 'drug for women giving birth' (Ar. Fr. 872). 16. ►ἐπίτεξ [f.] 'before delivery, near delivery'; after it καλλί-τεξ = καλλί-τεκνος (Hp. Epin.). --17. As a second member in several univerbations, e.g. μονο-τόκος 'giving birth to one cub' beside εὔ-τοκος 'having an easy birth, giving birth easily' (Arist.) wiht μονο-, εὐ-τοκέω, -ία, etc. On ►τέκνον, see s.v.
•ETYM Belongs to the old root *tek̑- 'to produce', which appears in reduplicated form in *te-tk̑- (Skt. 3sg. tāṣṭi 'fashions', 3pl. takṣati, etc.). Apparently, Greek is the only language that kept the root in its simple form.

•VAR Aor. τῖλαι, -ασθαι, fut. τιλῶ, -οῦμαι (com., etc.), aor. pass. τιλθῆναι (Ar.), τιλῆναι (LXX, pap.), perf. med. τέτιλμαι, especially the ptc. τετιλμένος (Ar., LXX), act. τέτιλκα (Hell.).
•COMP Also with παρα-, ἀπο-, περι-, etc. As a second member in νάκο-τιλτος 'whose fleece has been plucked, from whom the wool has been plucked off', also -τίλτης, -τιλτέω (com.); to this, as back-formations, the verbs θρυο-τίλλω 'to pluck bulrush', ὀλο-τίλλω 'to pluck entirely' (only ptc. pres., account PLond. I[p]).
•DER 1. τιλμός (ἀπο-, παρα-) [m.] 'plucking' (A. Backformations τίλοι [m.pl.] 'the fine hairs of the eyebrows' (Poll.), τιλλά· πτερά 'wings' (H.) (leg. πτίλα?).

•ETYM A verb τίλλω (from *τιλ-i̯ω) cannot be an old primary formation. If not a loan, it must be a denominative from *τίλος, *τίλον, vel sim. There are no cognates outside Greek. Frisk suggests a pre-form *πτίλλω, which would belong to πτίλον, via dissimilation in the compounded forms παρα-, περι-, ἀπο-(π)τίλλω.

•DER τιλάω (often with prefix, e.g. κατα-, ἐν-, προσ-, ἀπο-) [v.] 'to have a thin stool, to have diarrhoea' (Ar., Hippon., Hippiatr.), with τίλημα [n.] (EM). Here probably also τίλων, -ωνος [m.] name of a fish in the Thracian Sea Prasias (Hdt., Arist.), see Strömberg 1943: 61f.; cf. also ὀπισθο-τίλη, Boeot. ὀπιτθο-τίλα [f.] 'squid' (Stratt., H.), perhaps after ►σπατίλη.
•ETYM No etymology. The comparisons with Arm. t'rik' 'mist, dung', if from *tiHr-, OE þīnan 'be(come) wet, moist', OCS tina, Ru. tína 'mud, dirt' < *tiHn-, etc. remain speculative, since there is no evidence for a root *tiH- or *tH-i- in this meaning. The same holds for the connection within Greek with ►τῖφος. The word ►τήκω is not related, either.

Also -ακτρον [n.] 'winnowing fan' (pap. III^p), -αξις [f.] 'pushing away' (Heph. Astr., EM).
•ETYM Without a certain explanation. Acc. to an old hypothesis by Fick, τινάξαι, -ξω may have been dissimilated from *κινάξαι, -ξω (from ►κῑνέω, κίνυμαι), from which τινάσσω (after πατάσσω, ἀράσσω, etc.) was later created.

τινθαλέος [adj.] 'boiling hot' (Nic., Nonn.). ◄PG?(V)► •COMP δια-τινθαλέος 'id.' (Ar. V. 329; cf. διά-θερμος).
•ETYM Formation from ►τινθός after αὐαλέος, etc. The meaning of ►τινθός is unclear: perhaps 'hot steam', of a kettle (Lyc. 36)? It has been compared with τιντόν· ἑφθόν 'boiled' (H., but alphabetically incorrect). The variation τ/θ in the gloss (if it is reliable) points to a Pre-Greek word (Fur.: 191).

τινθυρίζω [v.] 'to twitter' (Call.). ◄PG?(S)► •ETYM Onomatopoeic; cf. τιτίζω (s.v. ►τιτιγόνιον) and ►ψιθυρίζω. The prenasalized consonant and perhaps the suffix -υρ- may point to a Pre-Greek word.

τίνω [v.] act. 'to pay, settle, atone', med. 'to make (oneself) pay or atone, punish, avenge'. ◄IE *k^wei- 'punish, avenge'► •VAR Ion. ῑ, Att. ῐ; also τείνυμαι (Hom., Hes., Hdt.), Cret. ipv. ἀπο-τεινύτω (V^a), Hell. and late (ἀπο-)τείνυμι, -τίννυμι, -τιννύω, Arc. ἀπυ-τειέτω; aor. τεῖσαι (Aeol. πεῖσαι), -ασθαι, fut. τείσω (Cypr. πείσει), -ομαι (Hom.), aor. pass. τεισθῆναι, perf. τέτεισμαι (Att.), act. τέτεικα (Hell.).
•DIAL Myc. ptc. med. qe-ja-me-no /k^wei^{h}ameno-/ (interpreted as a sigmatic aorist by LIV^2, as opposed to Lejeune 1958-1963: 305-6, 300^{55} and DELG s.v.).
•COMP Also with prefix, especially ἀπο- and ἐκ- (also προσ-απο-, προσ-εκ-, etc.).
•DER τίσις [f.] 'payment, compensation, penitence, punishment, revenge' (Il., epic Ion. poet.); from ἐκτίνω: ἔκτισις (also -ει- after τεῖσαι, τείσω), Arc. ἔστεισις [f.] 'payment, atonement' (Att. Hell. and late), ἔκτεισμα [n.] 'id.' (Pl., Hell.); from ἀποτίνω: ἀπότισις [f.] 'repayment' (Ath.), ἀπότεισμα [n.] 'id.' (Amorgos). Also τιτυς in τιτυϝος [gen.] 'amends' (Gortyn); τίτας [m.] 'avenger, avenging' (A. Ch. 67 [lyr.]), Dor. for *τί-τής; also designation of an official (Gortyn), τίται· εὔποροι, ἢ κατήγοροι τῶν ἀρχόντων 'resourceful; accusers/prosecutors of rulers' (H.); also ἀ-τίτας 'non-payer' (A. Eu. 256 [lyr.]).

•ETYM The difference between the Ion. and Att. presents shows that τίνω goes back to a thematicized nasal present *τινϝω. Dialectally and in Homer, Greek preserves the athematic formation τείνυμαι (mostly written τῖν(ν)-; see Wackernagel 1916: 77ff. with important details), which has a secondary full grade replacing *τῐνυμαι (perhaps after aor. τείσασθαι, fut. τείσομαι); Arc. ἀπυ-τειέτω was also built on the latter forms. Later attestations are τεισθῆναι, τέτεισμαι, τέτεικα (all innovations). Regarding cognates of the Greek verb, it is now customary to distinguish three roots *k^wei-: 1. 'to observe' (whence probably Gr. ►τίω), 2. 'to gather, pile up' (whence perhaps Gr. ►ποιέω), and 3. 'to punish, avenge' (see LIV^2). The original Greek nu-present *τίνυται has a formal counterpart in Av. cinuuaṇt- [ptc.pres.act.] 'penitent (?)' < *k^wi-nu-ent-. Others connect *k^wei- 1. and 3., assuming a semantic development 'to observe, animadvertere' > 'to avenge, punish'. This allows comparison of Skt. thematic cáyate 'avenge, punish' (which would be Gr. *τείεται = IE *k^wei-e-toi; cf. Arc. ἀπυ-τειέτω [act.]), to which the act. Av. ci-kaiiaṯ 'should pay/mend, ἀποτεινύτω' (with reduplication; cf. Skt. cikéti 'observes') is related. In Anatolian, we may now compare Lyc. A ttiti, B kikiti 'to fine'. More cognate Avestan forms are given by LIV^2 s.v. The ti-stem in τίσις is compared with Skt. ápa-citi- [f.] 'requittal', IE *(-)k^wi-ti-. Within Greek, the o-grade h_2-stem ►ποινή 'penalty' is related, corresponding to Lith. káina 'price', and found in Av. kaēnā- 'punishment', IE *k^woi-nh_2-.

τίπτε [adv.] 'why then?' (Hom., A. Ag. 975 [lyr.]). ◄GR► •ETYM Various explanations have been given throughout time. Szemerényi assumed syncope from τί ποτε (Szemerényi 1964: 218f.); Kretschmer compared τίπτε with Lat. mihī-pte, suā-pte, etc.; others equated *τιτ-πε and Lat. quippe (e.g. Schwyzer: 266). Recently, Lillo Glotta 70 (1992): 15-19 brilliantly solved the problem by arguing that the word represents *k^wid-k^we (thus an older variant of τί τε), giving *k^witk^we > *k^wik^{w}te > τίπτε.

τίς [pron.] 'who, which, what?'. ◄IE *k^wi- interrogative and indefinite pronoun► •VAR Ntr. τί, gen. τέο (Ion.), τοῦ (Att.), younger τίνος; dat. τέωι, τῶι, τίνι; acc. τίνα, etc.

•DER Enclitic τις, τι, etc.: indefinite pronoun 'some(one), whoever, etc.'.
•ETYM Identical with Lat. quis, quid, Hitt. kuiš, kuit, etc., from IE *k^wi-s, ntr. k^wi-d. The gen. τέο corresponds to OCS česo, Go. ƕis 'whose', from IE *k^we-so. Av. cahiiā received the nominal ending *-si̯o. In Greek, the dat. τέωι, τῶι was formed after τέο, τοῦ. The accus. τίνα added the ending -α to older *τίν (= Hitt. kuin, Av. cim, etc.), just like ἕν-α, Ζῆνα, etc. From this point, the forms τίν-ος, τίν-ι, etc. with stem-final -ν- spread (already Hom.). The old ntr.plur. *k^wih_2 is found in ἅ-σσα, ἅ-ττα (= ἅ-τινα), and in ἄσσα, ἄττα. It arose by reanalysis of ὁπποῖά σσα as ὁποῖ' ἄσσα, etc. As an independent element, it was preserved in Boeot. ►τά, Megar. σά 'why, how?'.

•ETYM Like most expressions for 'chalk', the word must be a loan. A different hypothesis is offered by Reichelt IF 40 (1922): 47, who connects Skt. śvitná- 'whitish', as well as the TN Τιτάνη, Aeol. Lac. Πιτάνη, and (with different anlaut) κίττανος· ἡ κονιακὴ τίτανος (H.) (assuming a cross with κόνις?). However, given the variation ε/ι, the word is probably Pre-Greek.

To this, semantically independent, ἔκτρω-μα, -σις, -σμός 'miscarriage' (Hp., Arist.), with -ωτικός (Plu.), -ματικός, -ματιαῖος, -ματισμός (gloss.).
•ETYM Because of the -υ- in Att. τραῦμα, τρω- used to be explained as from a long diphthong τρωυ-, and connected with ▸τέρυς. Alternatively, Att. τραῦμα has been considered an innovation after θραῦμα, θραύω. In this case, τιτρώσκω should be derived from a root terh*$_3$- (cf. LIV[2] s.v.). It rather seems, however, that influence of θραῦμα is most improbable. Moreover, introduction of vocalism -αυ- in a root τρω- would be incomprehensible. We have to start from a root τρω-/ τραυ-, which cannot be explained in IE terms. In Pre-Greek, however, a variation αυ/ ω is found: see Fur.:

237, 242, 301[32], 387 (κασαύρα, -άς / κασωρίς; σαῦσαξ / σώσικες; τραύξανα / τρώξανον, as well as ▸θαῦμα/ θῶμα). This means that the word is Pre-Greek; the connection with Skt. turá- 'wound, ill' should then be discarded, and connection with teru-* (▸τέρυς) 'soft, weak' is semantically unconvincing. Peters 1980b: 328ff. tries to revive Martinet's theory of labialized h*$_3$, but this theory is now generally rejected. The root terh*$_3$- in LIV[2] should therefore be deleted. For terh*$_1$- 'to pierce', see ▸τείρω, ▸τετραίνω, ▸τεράμων, ▸τέρετρον, etc.

•ETYM Fur.: 184 compares διθύρ-αμβος, which would contain a variant of τιτυρ- with a Pre-Greek suffix -αμβος. Previous proposals include connection with ▸σάτυρος, from IE tū-* 'swell' (LIV[2] s.v. teuh*$_2$-), by Solmsen IF 30 (1912): 32ff. This is rejected by Nehring Glotta 14 (1925): 158ff., who considers both words to be loans from Asia Minor. Deroy Par. del pass. 17 (1962): 421ff. connects -τυρος with ταῦρος 'bull' (which would also stem from Asia Minor). See ▸διθύραμβος.

•DER On ►τῑμή, see s.v.
•ETYM The connection with τίνω 'to punish' depends on the reconstruction of the root of τίω. On the basis of Slavic material cognate with τίω (OCS čajati 'to expect, hope for', SCr. čȁjati 'to wait'), Derksen 2008 opts for a reconstruction *k^weh_1i-, with internal laryngeal. The same would work well for OCS kajati sę 'to repent', in spite of semantic doubts by Derksen 2008 s.v. The Skt. verb 3pl. act. cā́yanti, ptc. med. cā́yamāna- (RV) 'to observe, honor', cāyú- [adj.] 'showing reverence', etc. are also easily explained from a root *k^weh_1i-, whereas a reconstruction without laryngeal would force one to assume a so-called Narten present for PIE, a type for which most evidence has now disappeared. If we look at Greek, the alternation between ῑ and ῐ in Homer could also be explained by an alternation *k^weh_1ie/o- / *k^wh_1ie/o- (note that -τῑτος is long as well, which could be from a metathesized *k^wh_1i-to-), where the latter form would give τίε/ο-, while in the former, *tēje/o- may have been replaced by τῑε/ο-. Moreover, τῑμή is best explained as from a root with laryngeal, instead of assuming a suffix *-$smeh_2$-. The root formed an i-present *k^weh_1-i-, and a vestige of the old root *k^weh_1- may be found in Gr. ►τηρέω.
For the shift meaning in Greek, Lat. observāre 'to observe, honor, etc.' has been compared.

τλήμων •VAR τλῆναι. ⇒ταλάσσαι.

τμήγω [v.] 'to cut, cleave, divide' (Il., epic). ◂GR▸
•VAR Aor. τμῆξαι, -ασθαι; Aeol. τμᾶξαι (Pi., Balb.), fut. τμήξω, them. aor. διέτμᾰγον [1sg.] (η 276), pass. (διε)τμάγεν [3pl.] (Hom.), Hell. and late τμηγῆναι.
•COMP Also with prefix, especially ἀπο-, δια-.

•DER ἀπο-τμήξ, -ῆγος [adj.] 'cut off, steep' (σκοπιή, A. R. 2, 581; cf. ἀπορρώξ); also -τμηξις [f.] 'cutting off' (late), τμῆγος· ... βούτμημα 'furrow'; also τμήγας· γατόμος, ἀροτήρ 'cleaving the ground, plougher' (H.).
•ETYM Enlargement of τμη- in τμη-τός, -θῆναι, etc. (from ►τέμνω), after several models. The short vowel in τμάγεν (to ἐτμάγην) recalls ἐρράγην, ἐάγην. Perhaps this was the origin of the hapax διέτμαγον. Further, τμῆξαι, τμήξω were built on ῥῆξαι, ῥήξω, etc.; see Chantraine 1942: 392 and 400. Güntert 1914: 132 supposes a cross with θήγω (θάγω) 'to whet'; Chantraine 1942: 330 attempts to find a semantic differentiation from ►τέμνω. The Doric forms with τμᾱ must be secondary; see the discussion in DELG s.v.

το- [pron.] 'this, that; the' (Hom., epic poet., Dor.). ◂IE *to-, teh_2- 'the, that'▸ •VAR In acc. τόν, fem. τήν (Dor. τάν), ntr. nom.acc. τό, plur. nom. τοί, fem. ταί, ntr. nom.acc. τά, etc.
•ETYM Inherited demonstrative pronoun, used in post-Homeric Greek as the article, and in Homer as a demonstrative and anaphoric pronoun. Ionic-Attic replaced the old nom. τοί, ταί with οἱ, αἱ, after the nom.sg. ὁ, ᾱ̔. The formation is identical with Skt. acc.sg. tám, tā́m, tád, nom.pl.m. té, etc., and with Gm. forms like Go. acc. msc. þan-a, fem. þo, ntr. þat-a, plur. þai. A new nom.sg. was created in Lith. tàs, tà, OCS tъ, ta, to, etc. See ►ὁ, ἡ.

τοι [encl.pron.] 'to you', dat.sg. corresponding to IA σοί (epic Ion., Dor. Aeol.), from ►σύ. ◂IE *tu- 'you'▸ •VAR Dor. also accented τοί.
•DER Hence Att. τοι as an enclitic pcl. 'indeed, truly, etc.'. Also at the beginning of a sentence and with orthotonic accent, τοὶ γάρ, τοιγάρ (epic poet.).
•ETYM The atonic particle corresponds to Skt. te. For the stressed sentence-initial particle, connection with the demonstrative το- has been proposed; see Schwyzer 1950: 580ff., who also discuss strengthened τοιγάρτοι, τοιγαροῦν, as well as τοίνυν, μέντοι, etc.

τοῖος [demonstr. pron.] 'such, such as' (especially poetic, Il.+). ◂GR▸ •VAR fem. τοία (Ion. -η), ntr. τοῖον.
•DER τοιοῦτος, τοιόσδε 'id.' (esp. IA prose) built on οὗτος, ὅδε.
•ETYM Greek formation built on the pronominal stem το-. The origin is disputed: *tosio- (< gen.sg. *tosio) or *toiso-? The second option is chosen by W. Petersen TAPA 46 (1915): 59ff., who starts from the gen.pl. τοίων = Skt. téṣām, ON þeira, from PIE *toisom to *to-, Gr. ►το-. Thence, the other case forms, e.g. τοῖοι, τοῖος, etc. In the same way, ποῖος, οἷος could have been derived from ποίων, οἵων (= Skt. kéṣām, yéṣām); after this also arose the other words in -οῖος.

τόλμη [f.] 'boldness, courage, daredevilry, dauntlessness, brashness' ◂IE *$telh_2$- 'raise, weigh, bear'▸ •VAR -μη is rare; usually τόλμᾰ (IA), cf. below on τολμήεις, -μάω; Dor. τόλμᾱ (Pi.).
•COMP ἄτολμος 'without daring, daring nothing' (Pi., IA), πάντολμος 'daring everything' (A., E.); ἀπότολμος 'dauntless, courageous' (late) from ἀποτολμάω.
•DER 1. τολμήεις, Dor. -άεις 'courageous, dauntless, enduring' (Hom., Pi.). 2. -ηρός 'id.' (Att.), -ηρία [f.] (Hell. pap.). 3. Denominative -άω [v.] 'to show courage, bring oneself to courage; to act in spite of oneself, endure' (Il.), Hdt. -έω, aor. -ῆσαι, etc., also with ἀπο-, ἐπι-, κατα-, etc. Thence -ημα [n.] 'venture, risk' (Att.), -ησις [f.] 'reckless deed' (Pl. Def.), -ητής [m.] 'daredevil' (Th., Ph.), more popular -ητίας 'id.' (Com. Adesp.), -ητικός = -ηρός (late). 4. Hypocoristic τόλμιλλος [m.] 'daredevil' (Theognost. Can.).
•ETYM PIE *$tolh_2$-$m(e)h_2$- > PGr. *tolmă-. The root-final *h_2 of the PIE pre-form was lost before it could vocalize to *a. Traditionally, this loss is ascribed to the influence of the *o in the root, a change known as "De Saussure's Law"; cf. Beekes 1969: 238-242. Van Beek 2009 now disconnects the laryngeal loss from the presence or absence of the o-grade, and ascribes it to the environment *-VLHNV-. The usual form τόλμα arose as a back-formation from τολμάω. See ►ταλάσσαι.

τολύπη [f.] 'a clew of wool or yarn', also metaphorically of onion bulbs, pumpkins, ball-shaped cakes (Ar. Lys. 586, Eub., S. *Fr.*1102, LXX, AP, etc.). ◂PG▸ •DER τολυπεύω 'to wind wool or yarn into a clew' (Ar. Lys. 587 [anap.], ambiguous τ 137), mostly metaph. 'to instigate, accomplish with difficulty, undergo' (epic poet. Il.), also with ἐκ-; hence τολυπευμα [n.] = τολύπη, -ευτικός (Phot., Suid., H.).
•ETYM Maurice RPh. 65 (1991) connects τυλυφάντης 'cushion-cover-weaver', which he relates to Myc. tu-ru-pte-ri-ja, assuming influence of κορύνη or τορύνη to account for the vocalism. Fur.: 340 compares Luw. taluppi 'clump of dough' (and MoFr. talouppe); the word may have ο < α before υ. A recent attempt at an analysis has been made by Melchert Orpheus 8 (1998): 47-51: there is a Hitt. verb tarupp-^{zi} 'to gather, collect', with the rare variant talupp- (2x); cf. Kloekhorst 2008: 850. The o may come from a before u, like in Pre-Greek. The word must belong to the Pre-Greek substrate, (a language cognate to) which must have spoken in large parts of Anatolia as well. This may explain why a similar word is found in Anatolian.

τόμουροι (-οῦροι) [m.pl.] designation of the priests of Zeus in Dodona by Strabo 7.7.11, who cites it as a v.l. in π 403; voc.sg. τόμουρε· μάντι (Lyc. 223). Acc. to H. = προφῆται, ἱερεῖς, οἰωνοσκόποι, διάκονοι 'interpreters (of the oracle), priests, augurs, officials (of a temple)'. ◂PG?▸

τονθορύζω [v.] 'to murmur, speak inarticulately, gurgle' (A. Fr. 298 = 630 M., Ar., Herod., Luc., Opp.). ◂PG▸ •VAR Aor. -ύσαι, fut. -ύξω; pres. also τονθορίζω and τονθρύζω.
•COMP Rarely with ὑπο-, δια-.

•DER τονθ(ο)ρυσμός [m.] 'murmuring' (Phryn.), τονθρυστής = γογγυστής (Aq.); backformation τονθρύς· φωνή 'voice' (H.).
•ETYM Expressive reduplicated formation in -θορ-, with dissimilation to τ- in the initial syllable. It belongs to ►θόρυβος, ►θρυλέω, ►θρέομαι, whereas the suffix is the same as in γογγύζω, γρύζω, ὀλολύζω, etc. Gr. τονθολυγέω 'to gargle, cluck' (Pherecr.) has a similar meaning. On τοιθορύσσειν, see under ►τανθαρύζω. = The formation, with prenasalization, is clearly Pre-Greek (Fur.: 382).

τόνθων [?] · παρὰ Κορίννῃ ἐπὶ νωτιαίου (νοτιβίου codd.) κρέως ὄνομα 'name of the flesh on the spinal vertebrae (Corinna)' (H.) = fr. 685 P. ◂?▸ •ETYM Bechtel 1921, 1: 310 supposes that it denotes a special delicacy, connecting τένθω 'to be a glutton' (see ►τένθης).

τόξον [n.] 'bow', plur. 'shooting device(s), (bows and) arrows' (Il.). On the plur. see Schwyzer 1950: 43 and 51, Chantraine 1953: 31f. ◂PG▸ •DIAL Myc. to-ko-so-ta = τοξότας, to-ko-so-wo-ko.
•COMP τοξοφόρος [m., f.] 'bearing the bow, bowbearer', epithet of Apollo, Artemis and others (epic poet. Φ 483, also Hdt.), τοξόκλυτος 'famous for the bow' (Pi., B.), also κλυτότοξος 'having a famous bow', epithet of Apollo (Hom., B.), ἀγκυλότοξος 'having a crooked bow' (Il., Pi.).
•DER 1. τοξ-ότης, Dor. -ότας [m.] 'archer' (Il.), -ότις [f.] (Call. et al.), meaning unclear in Plb. 8, 7, 3 (not with LSJ 'loophole for shooting arrows'); also plant name = ἀρτεμισία (Poet. de herb.). 2. -ῖτις [f.] (νευρά) 'bowstring' (Hero, Ph. Bel.), epithet of Artemis (Cos); uncertain -ιτησία = ἀρτεμισία (Ps.-Dsc. 3, 113; read -ῖτις?). 3. -ίας in Τοξίου βουνός· τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος τοῦ ἐν Σικυῶνι 'of Apollo in Sicyon' (H.). 4. -ία [f.] name of a goddess (mentioned beside Ἄρτεμις; Gortyn). 5. -οσύνη [f.] 'archery, bowmanship' (N 314, E. [lyr.]). 6. -ιανοί [pl.] 'people born under the sign of τοξότης (Sagittarius)' (Cat. Cod. Astr.). 7. -εύς [m.] myth. PN (Hes. Fr. 110, 4), hypocoristic like Τόξος (Corinth. vase). 8. Diminutive -άριον [n.] (Luc. et al.). 9. -ικός 'belonging to the bow, the archer', -ική (τέχνη) [f.] (Att.), -ικόν (φάρμακον) [n.] 'arrow poison' (Arist., Str. et al.); also for *τοξοτικός. 10 -ωτός = arcuatus (gloss.). 11. Denominative verb τοξ-εύω 'to shoot with bow and arrows' (Il.), also κατα-, ἀπο-, ἐκ-, etc. Thence -ευμα [n.] 'projectile, arrow' (IA), -ευσις [f.] 'shooting with bow and arrows' (Lib.), -εία [f.] 'id.' (Hell. and late); -ευτής [m.] 'archer' (Ψ 850 et al.), also -ευτήρ [m.] (Arat., Nonn.); mostly referring to the constellation (metri causa for -ότης, -ευτής), [f.] -εύτειρα (Opp.), -ευτική [f.] 'archery' (Gal.). 12. τοξ-άζομαι 'to shoot at someone with bow and arrow' (Hom., Opp.), -άζω 'id.' (Heracleit. All.), also with ἐπι-; derived from plur. τόξα?
•ETYM Gr. τόξον replaces inherited βιός: in Homer, τόξον is already the more usual word for 'bow'. As the Iranians, and especially the Scythians, were famous archers, one might suspect τόξον to be a loan from an Iranian language; compare MoP taχš 'bow, arrow' and Scythian PN Τόξαρις, Τάξακις. However, the Mycenaean attestations disprove this possibility. Thus, τόξον could be of Pre-Greek origin. Latin taxus 'yew-tree' could also be related, but it cannot be a borrowing from Greek.

τοπάζιον [n.] 'topaz', probably also of chrysolite and of other stones (LXX, Str., D. S., Apoc.). ◄PG(V)► •VAR Also -αζος [m.] (AP, J., Orph. et al.), -αζον [n.] (Eust.).
•ETYM A loanword which (according to Iuba in Plin. HN 37, 108) was taken from the language of the Trogodytes, and named after an island of the same name in the Red Sea (likewise HN 6, 169). The form ταβάσιος, -ις (PHolm.) presents another variant. Fur.: 155, 344 assumes that the variation ταβάσ- / τοπάζ- points to a Pre-Greek word.

τόπος [m.] 'place, region, space; subject of a speech, etc.' (IA since A.). ◄IE top-o-*► •COMP τοπάρχης [m.] head of a district, esp. in Egypt; thence -έω [v.] -ία [f.] (LXX, pap., etc.); ἄτοπος 'not at its place, out of place, unusual', ἐντόπιος 'situated in the region, indigenous' (Pl., etc.).
•DER 1. τοπικός 'local' (Arist., pap., medic. et al.). 2. -ιον [n.] 'place (of burial)' (PLond., inscr. Asia Minor). 3. -ίτης [m.] 'inhabitant of a place' (St. Byz.). 4. -εῖον (-ήϊον) [n.] 'cord, rope' (com., Call., Hell. inscr.). Denominative verbs: 5. τοπάζω 'to aim at a place or a point, suspect, guess' (Att.), also with ὑπο-; thence τοπαστικός 'inventive, sharp-witted' (Men.), ὑποτοπασμός [m.] 'suspicion' (J.). 6. τοπίζω 'to localize', -ισμός [m.] 'localization' (comm. Arist.), ἐκτοπίζω 'to remove', thence -ισμός, -ιστικός (Arist., Hell. and late). 7. ὑποτοπέομαι, -έω (-εύω) 'to suspect, surmise' (Ion., Th., Ar.).
•ETYM The broad semantic range renders etymologizing difficult. The noun can go back to PIE top-o-* or tok^w-o-. A connection with PIE tek^w- 'to run, flow' is semantically difficult. The root tep-* 'to hit, stick, smear' (whence OCS teti, 1sg. tepǫ 'to beat', Lith. tèpti 'to smear, grease') could yield a noun top-o-* 'stain, spot', which then developed to 'spot, place'; compare the similar semantic change which took place in MoE spot or MoHG Flecken (a suggestion by M. de Vaan; p.c.). Alternatively, Meier-Brügger Glotta 74 (1997/8): 99f. has derived τόπος from tep-* 'to be hot', supposing an original meaning 'hot place, hearth' > 'any place'.

•VAR with metathesis τολάριον.
•ETYM Possibly borrowed from Lat. toral(i), according to LSJ.

τόρβηλος [adj.] · μεμψίμοιρος 'criticizing, querulous' (H.). ◄?► •ETYM Specht KZ 59 (1932): 34[1] explains it by dissimilation from τόλβηλος, which could belong to the isolated form τέλβεσθαι· μεμψιμοιρεῖν, ἐπικαλεῖν 'to grumble, complain' (H.). These forms could go back to a root $telg^w$-, but no cognate forms are known.

τόρδῡλον [n.] name of an umbelliferous plant, 'hartwort, Tordylium officinale' (Ruf. apud Orib., Gal., Plin.). ◄PG(V)►

•ETYM Unknown etymology. Fur.: 367 compares ὄρδειλον (Nic. Th. 841), which is perhaps a mistake for τ-. It cannot be explained as an old variant without τ- pointing to Pre-Greek origin, pace Fur.: 391.

•VAR ἔτορε Λ 236, τορεῖν· τορῆσαι, τρῆσαι, τεμεῖν (H.). Reduplicated in τέτορεν· ἔτρωσεν 'to damage', τετόρῃ· τρώσῃ 'wounding' (H.); thence ptc. τετορήσας (h. Merc. 119; verse-final), fut. τετορήσω 'to pierce with tones, proclaim with shrill tones' (Ar. Pax 381, parodizing, see Schwyzer: 783), perf. ptc. τετορημένος (Nonn.). Also s-aor. τορῆσαι = τορεῦσαι 'to stitch, chase, form' (Arat., AP, Sardis), also with ἀντι- 'to pierce, pervade, penetrate' (E 337, K 267), fut.ptc. ἀντιτορήσων (h. Merc. 178), pres. ptc. ἀντιτοροῦντα (ibid. 283); aor. pass. διατορηθῆναι (Anon. apud Suid.). Verbal adj. τορητός 'vulnerable' (Lyc.).
•DER τορεύω, -εῦσαι 'to carve, emboss, form' (S. Fr. 315, Hell. and late.), also with δια-; ᾠδὴν τορεύειν (Ar. Th. 986 [lyr.]) 'to carve a song' (?). Hence τορευ-τός 'chased, engraved', -τής [m.] 'chaser, engraver', -τική (τέχνη) 'the art of engraving', -μα [n.] 'chased or engraved work', -σις = caelatura (gloss.), -εία [f.] 'engraving', -εῖον [n.] 'chased work' (all Hell. or late). τορεύς [m.] 'borer' (Philyll. apud Phot., AP), probably a backformation from τορεύω, not from τόρος 'id.' (Att. inscr. IV[a], H., Eust.). Both τόρος and διάτορος 'piercing, pervading, loud; pierced' (A., S., Plu., Luc.: δια-τετραίνω) could be derived from τορεῖν. Read διατορία in Thphr. HP 11, 4.
•ETYM The meaning of the verb fits perfectly with that of the PIE root $terh_1$-* 'to drill', but the o-grade in aor. is problematic. It has been proposed that it developed through metathesis of a sequence -ero-* > -ore- (similarly for ►πορεῖν, ►μολεῖν, ►θορεῖν). This would mean that there was a root aorist tero-* < $terh_3$-* (cf. ►τιτρώσκω), but this remains speculative. Alternatively, we could be dealing with real o-grade verbal formations. Epic ἀντι-τορῆσαι, -τορήσων, -τοροῦντα are innovations. DELG adduces Skt. tará- 'piercing, which resonates' and perhaps OIr. tairm 'sound'. See further ►τορός, ►τετραίνω, ►τείρω, and ►τέρυς.

•DER τορμ-ίον [n.] 'small peg' (Ph. Bel.), -ικά [n.pl.] 'mortises' (Hero Bel.); τόρμη [f.] = πλήμνη, καμπή, καμπτήρ, νύσσα, ὕσπληξ, δρόμος (Ael. Dion., H., Suid.); the meaning of the variant τόρμᾰ (Lyc. 262) is unclear: πλήμνη or νύσσα? (sch. = τὸ χάραγμα τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ τροχοῦ 'trace of a wheel'). Glosses: ἐκ τορμῶν· ἀπὸ τοῦ καμπτῆρος ἢ τοῦ σύμπαντος δρόμου 'from the turning point, or the whole course', ἐκτορμεῖν· ἐκτετράφθαι τοῦ δρόμου 'to be turned off the road' (H.).
•ETYM A derivative of the root $terh_{1/3}$-*; cf. ►τορεῖν. Cognates: Hitt. tarma- 'nail, peg', CLuw. tarma/i- [c.] 'nail, peg' < $tor(h_1)$-mo-*; the appurtenance of ON þarmr [m.], MoHG Darm < PGm. þarma-* is less certain. With a prop vowel -ο-: τόρονος (cod. -όνος)· τόρνος. Ταραντῖνοι (H.); τορονευτός = τετορνευμένος (Lacon. in Edict. Diocl.).
•ETYM An instrument noun with PIE suffix *-no- from the root of τείρω, τετραίνω, τορεῖν, etc. For the semantics, compare κυκλο-τερής 'turned around, round as a circle', κύκλου τόρνος (X.), κυκλοτερὲς τορνεύσασθαι (Pl.), and also Lat. teres, -etis 'rounded off, smooth' to terō 'to rub'. For the non-vocalization of the laryngeal in PIE $torh_{1/3}$-no-, see on ► τόλμη.

τορός [adj.] 'loud, shrill, perceptible, clear', of the voice; also 'fast, agile' (A., E., Ar., Emp., Pl., X.). ◄IE $torh_{1/3}$-o- 'piercing'►

τορύνη 1 [f.] 'stirring spoon, stirring ladle' (Sophr., Ar., Pl.). ◄PG?(S)► •VAR Dor. -α (ῡ Ar., ῠ AP 6, 305).
•DER τορυνάω [v.] 'to stir' (medic., Eub.), also συν-; τορύνω (Ar. Eq. 1172) is probably a backformation to the noun (different Schwyzer: 491: τορύνη a backformation from τορύνω).
•ETYM The origin of the suffix -ύνη is unclear; compare κορύνη 'club', σιβύνη 'spear', χελύνη 'lip, jaw', etc. Semantically, one could connect the Germanic verb þuer-* 'to stir', e.g. OE þweran, OHG dweran, OE þwiril, OHG dwiril 'stirrer' < PGm. þwer-ila-*. Yet formally this etymology is implausible, since it would require a zero grade *τυρ-ύνη, whence τορύνη with dissimilation. Derivation from the root of ► τείρω is semantically difficult. Lat. trua 'stirring spoon' has the same meaning, but the form cannot be reconciled with that of τορύνη. Since there is a PG suffix -ῡν-, τορύνη could be Pre-Greek. Its ο could continue original a* before a following u*.

•ETYM From PIE toti-o-, built on the PIE adverb toti 'so many' (in Skt. táti, Lat. tot, toti-dem 'so many'). The Greek formation probably first arose as a plural τόσ(σ)οι 'as many', whence the sing. τόσ(σ)ος 'as large'.

•ETYM Literally 'gnawer, eater of sweets', agent noun of τραγεῖν; see ►τρώγω. There, it is concluded that the group of τρώγω is of Pre-Greek origin, but the formation of τραγεῖν may be an inner-Greek creation. See ►αἴξ, ►ἀρνειός, ►κάπρος, ►κριός, and ►τραγῳδός.

τραγῳδός [m.] 'singer and dancer in the tragic choir, tragic actor' (Att. Hell. and late), very rarely and mostly uncertain 'poet of tragedies'; οἱ τραγῳδοί also 'rendering of a tragedy'. ◄GR►

τράμις [f.] 'the narrow space between the legs between the anus and the genitals: the perineum' (Archil., Hippon., Ar., Ruf., Luc.), acc. to H. = τὸ τρῆμα τῆς ἕδρας, ὁ ὄρρος. τινὲς ἔντερον, οἱ δὲ ἰσχίον 'the hole of the seat, the rump; the innards, the hip-joint (or the flesh around it)' ◄PG?►
•DER διάτραμις = λισπόπυγος (Stratt.).
•ETYM Frisk explains it as a zero grade verbal noun in -mi-, from the same root as τόρμος 'socket, peg' (from ►τείρω, ►τετραίνω.). This is formally difficult, because that root probably had a final laryngeal. It could well be a Pre-Greek word.

τράμπις, -ιδος, -ιος [f.] according to sch. Lyc. 'βαρβαρικὸν πλοῖον' (Lyc., Nic. [v.l. -βις]). ◄PG►

•ETYM From PIE trh$_2$-n-, from the root terh$_2$- 'to pass, cross' (cf. E seeing through). Alternatively, it could have secondary long -ᾱ- for ē*, in which case it derives from the root terh$_1$-* 'to pierce' (cf. E sharp sight). The s-stem adj. recalls σαφηνής, etc. (see ►σαφής).

τραυλός [adj.] 'suffering from a speech disorder, with deficient speech', for instance 'lisping, stammering', metaphorically of swallows 'chirping' (Hdt., Hp., Call. com., Arist., AP, etc.). ◄PG?►
•COMP τραυλόφωνος 'with lisping speech' (H. s.v. Βάττος, beside ἰσχνόφωνος; from Hdt. 4, 155), ὑπότραυλος 'lisping something' (Hp.), ποικιλότραυλα (Theoc., of the μέλη of the κόσσυφοι); PN Τραύλη (Lucr.).
•DER τραυλ-ότης [f.] 'speech disorder' (Arist., Plu.), -ίζω (ὑπο-) 'to speak deficiently, etc.' (Ar., Arist., Luc.), whence -ισμός (Plu.); also -ωσις [f.] (Gal.).
•ETYM The suffix -λος is also found in other expressions for physical and psychical defects, such as τυφλός, χωλός, σιφλός. Unclear etymology. Wackernagel 1897: 16f. connects it as trs-u-* = Go. þaursus 'ξηρός', to which ►ἀτειρής from *ἀ-τερσ-ής could belong as well. Yet the loss of σ in τραυλός and in ἀτειρής is improbable beside τρασιά and τέρσομαι. Alternatively, does it belong to τραῦμα (see on ►τιτρώσκω)? The word might well be Pre-Greek.

τραύξανα [n.pl.] 'dry wood, brushwood' (Pherer.). ◄PG►
•VAR Also τραύσανον· ξηρὸν πᾶν ἢ φρύγανον 'all dry items or firewood' (H.) (on σ for ξ see Schwyzer: 211).
•ETYM Acc. to Frisk, it may replace τρώξανα (see ►τρώγω) after θραύω. However, the variation αυ : ω betrays a Pre-Greek word (Fur.: 286). It is improbable that the -αυ- was taken from θραύω; cf. on τραῦμα s.v. τιτρώσκω. The meaning of τραύξανα does not warrant a derivation from τρώγω.

τράφηξ, -ηκος [m.] meaning uncertain. According to H. (similar EM, sch. Lyc. etc.), it means χάραξ, σκόλοψ. ἔνιοι τὸ δόρυ, ἄλλοι τὸ τῆς νεὼς χεῖλος; acc. to EM also = τὸ ξύλον ἔνθα τιθέασι τὸν ἄρτον. Rare in literary language: Bito ('beam, pole'?), Lycophr. 641 ('beam, plank' ?), 1001 ('spear'?), Att. inscr. IV^a ('board of a ship'?). ◄PG►
•VAR In H. also: τράπηκι· δόρατι (from Lyc. 1001?); also with o-vocalism: τρόφηξ (cod. -φῆς)· χάραξ, σκόλοψ (cod. σκώληξ), τρόπηκος· μερὶς τῆς κώπης ὁ τρόπηξ, οὗ ἐπιλαμβάνονται οἱ ἐρέσσοντες· ὥστε ἀπὸ μέρους τὴν κώπην.
•ETYM Instrument name in -ηξ (cf. οἴαξ, πῆληξ, etc.). In theory, one might connect Lat. trabs 'beam', but this cannot be substantiated. It is a loanword, according to Porzig ZII 5 (1927): 269, especially in view of the suffix. The variation α/ο and π/φ is frequent in Pre-Greek words. Fur.: 165 also compares τράμπις, τράμβις 'foreign ship', in which case we have prenasalized variants as well. Thus, it is clearly a Pre-Greek word; the o cannot be explained from the noun τροπή, as Frisk surmised.

•VAR Dor. (Epid.) -αλος.
•COMP τραχηλοκοπέω 'to cut the throat' (Plu., Arr., etc.; like δειροτομέω); περιτράχηλος 'running around the neck' (ἅλυσις, pap. II^p), whence περιτραχήλ-ιον, -ίδιον [n.] 'necklace' (Hell. and late).
•DER 1. τραχήλ-ια [n.pl.] 'meat scraps, originally of the neck' (Hp., com.). 2. -ιον [n.] "neck piece", 'the lower end of a spear' (EM, Harp.). 3. -ίς· collare (gloss.). 4. -ιαῖος 'of the neck' (Hippiatr., H., Eust.). 5. -ιμαῖος 'id.' (Str.). 6. -ιώδης 'stubborn' (EM), -ώδης 'neck-like' (sch.). 7. -ίζω (ἀπο-, προσ-) 'to bend back, lay bare, turn the neck', metaphorically of a ship 'to turn towards the wind', also 'to lay bare, expose; overpower' (Hell. and late); thence -ισμός, -ιστήρ (late). Further ἐκτραχηλίζω (of a horse) 'to throw the rider over its head', metaphorically 'to precipitate into ruin' (Ar., X., D., etc.), whence -ισμός (gloss.); παλιτραχηλίζω 'to be stubborn' (pap. III^a). 8. τραχηλιάω 'to arch the neck proudly, accompany proudly' (LXX+).
•ETYM Probably a Greek innovation, as opposed to inherited αὐχήν and δέρη 'neck'. Formally, one would like to connect τρέχω 'to run', τροχός, but the 'neck' is usually denominated as "turner, turn(ing)"; compare OCS vratъ to vratiti 'to turn', probably also Lith. kãklas, rather than 'runner'. Guilleux RPh. 73 (1999): 104 (see also DELG Supp.) follows an article by Létoublon-De Lamberterie RPh. 54 (1980): 305-326, which point to traces of an older meaning 'turn' for ►τρέχω. However, the word may also be Pre-Greek, as Fur.: 115^5 believes (the suffix -ηλο- is frequent in Pre-Greek).

D. With lengthened grade: τρωπάω, -άομαι [v.] 'to turn, change', iterative verb, only in pres. and ipf.; also with ἀπο-, παρα-, ἐπι-, μετα-.

•ETYM From PIE trep-, trp- 'to turn', caus. pres. trop-éie/o-*. Cognate forms: Lat. trepit 'vertit' (found only in Paul. Fest. p. 367, and perhaps a construction of grammarians), Skt. (ep.) trapate 'feels ashamed, becomes timid', Hitt. terepp-[zi] 'to plough'; cf. LIV² s.v. trep-*. Semantically, ἐντρέπομαι 'to care about sth.', also 'to be ashamed for sbd.' may be connected. The connection of Myc. to-ro-qe-jo-me-no (meaning unknown; with q) and of Lat. torqueō is untenable. The verb τραπέω 'to tread (out), press (grapes)' should probably be separated from τρέπω 'to turn'. See Mayrhofer EWAia s.v. trap.

τρέφω [v.] 'to make fat, feed, bring up, care for', also 'to cause to curdle', of γάλα 'milk' (ι 246) and of τυρός 'cheese' (Theoc. 25, 106, cf. τροφαλίς below). ⊲PG⊳

•ETYM Formally closest to τρέφω are two Lithuanian verbs: the full-grade yod-present drẽbti, 1sg. drebiù (= Latv. drēbt 'to rain wet snowdrift') 'to throw a thick fluid', and the zero-grade nasal present drimbù (inf. drìbti) 'to fall down in flakes, to plump down, etc.'. The semantics are not convincing, to say the least. Further, the Greek words are close to some expressions for 'dregs' in Germanic, Slavic, and Celtic: e.g. MLG draf, OHG trebir [pl.] 'dregs', MoE draff 'dregs', Ru. drobá (also drob, drebá) 'dregs' (loan from German?), MIr. drab 'dregs' (all from IE dʰrobʰ-*). The correspondence of ON drafli [m.] 'curdled milk' with τροφαλίς is certainly accidental.

The meaning of τρέφω was given by Benveniste as 'favoriser (par des soins appropriés) le développement de ce qui est soumis à croissance'. This renders the actual use of the Greek verb quite well, but it does not do justice to the original concrete meaning, which can still be seen in τρέφειν γάλα (according to Benveniste, 'favoriser la croissance naturelle du lait, le laisser atteindre l'état où il tend'), τρέφειν τυρόν (also τροφαλίς), as well as in τρέφειν ἀλοιφήν (ν 410), τρέφειν ἅλμην (ψ 237). On the nasalized forms, see ►θρόμβος.

The cheese name τράφαλλος must be Pre-Greek: in FS Kortlandt I demonstrated, following Kuiper, that all words in -αλλ-(ος) are Pre-Greek (cf. ►ὄκταλλος). The root has no IE cognates (see ►θρόμβος). A connection with θρόμβος is quite possible, if we assume that τρέφω as a whole is Pre-Greek. Prenasalization is well-known in Pre-Greek; the β is not problematic, as Pre-Greek did not distinguish between aspirated, voiced and unvoiced stops. Thus, θρόμβος proves that the verb is of Pre-Greek origin.

C. Adverbs: τροχ-άδην 'running' (Epigr., A. D.), ἐπι- 'running rapidly, fluent' (Hom. et al.).

D. Verbs: 1. iterative τροχ-άω 'to run', -όωντα (ο 451), also with ἐπι-, περι-, συν-, ὑπο- (Hell. and late poetry). 2. τροχ-άζω 'id.' S., etc.), -ίζομαι 'to run (round)' (Arist.; v.l. -άζομαι), quite rarely with κατα- etc.; περι-τροχισμός 'running round' (Antyll. apud Orib.). 4. -ιάζω· roto, rotor (gloss.), -ίασμα [n.] 'wheelwork' (Bito). 5. -εύομαι = rotor (Dosith.). 6. With lengthened grade: iterative (μετα-, περι-)τρωχάω (χ 163, ζ 318, A. R., Q. S. etc.).

•ETYM Like the synonymous verb θέω, τρέχω was originally limited to the present stem (the aorist being provided by δραμεῖν, as well as by ἀπο-δρᾶναι). The verb τρέχω is isolated within IE, but τροχός 'wheel' agrees completely with OIr. droch 'wheel' (IE *d^hrog^ho-). A form with lengthened grade (like τρωχ-άω) is probably seen in Arm. durgn, gen. drgan 'potter's wheel' (originally a root noun); on the phonetics, see Clackson 1994: 209[63]. The Germanic verb for 'walk' in Go. þragjan, etc., had initial t-, just like the Celtic group of MW and Co. tro 'change, time', OIr. traig 'foot'. See also ►τέρχνος.

The basic meaning of the verb is 'to run, hurry'. This is confirmed by the aor. δραμεῖν, and by several derivations and compounds: τροχίς 'runner, messenger'; τροχίλος 'birds that run'; τρεχέδειπνος 'who hurries to the feast'. The verb does not mean 'turn', a notion that is difficult to combine with 'run, hurry'. As for the notion 'wheel', DELG notes that one generally thinks that a 'wheel 'runs' (Frisk explains 'Läufer'). (In Dutch, one says "the wheel runs well" ["het wiel loopt goed"], not "the wheel turns well ["het wiel draait goed"].) We must reject Chantraine's suggestion that the verb may have meant 'courir en rond'. Therefore, τράχηλος cannot be derived from τρέχω.

•ETYM Onomatopoeia like ►στρί(γ)ξ, Lat. strīdeō 'to sizzle, drone, creak', and probably also ToA trisk- 'to drone'. Cf. ►τρύζω.

τριόρχης [m.] kind of hawk, perhaps 'buzzard, Buteo vulgaris' (Semon., Ar., Arist., Thphr., etc.). ◂?▸
•VAR Also -ος.
•ETYM Probably a loanword, adapted to τρι- and ὄρχις; cf. ἔν-ορχος and ἐν-όρχης (see ὄρχις). This would be an allusion to the folk-etymological meaning 'three-testicled' = 'very lascivious' in Timae. 145 (Plb. 12, 15, 2). Details in Thompson 1895 s.v.

τριοττίς ⇒ ὄσσε.

τρίς, τρίτος ⇒ τρεῖς.

τριττύς [f.] 1. 'third of a phyle' (Att.); τριττύ-αρχος [m.] 'principal of a τ.', whence -αρχέω (Pl., inscr., Poll. et al.), also τρικτυαρχέω (Delos III and II[a]). 2. 'sacrifice of three animals' (Call., sch.). 3. 'triad', of a threefold victory (Philostr.); τριτύς· τριάς 'number three, triad' (H.). ◂PG▸ •VAR τριπτύς (Ceos), τρικτύς (Delos, see below), -ύος.
•DER τριττύα [f.] 'sacrifice of three animals' (Ister, Porph.; doubtful Epich. 187, rather to be read -κτύα); also τριττο(ι)α (Athens V[a]), τρικτοι<α> (Sophr. 3; uncertain) 'id.'; unclear: τρικτευαν κηυαν (Delph. IV[a]), see on κηυα. Further τρίκτειρα (-εῖρα cod.) θυσία Ἐνυαλίῳ. θύεται δὲ πάντα τρία καὶ ἔνορχα 'sacrifice to Enyalius, all three are offered uncastrated' (H.); τριττοια (IG 1², 76), accent unknown, probably after τριττός; thence -οα (IG 1², 5: 5 [Eleusis V[a]]) with loss of the ι.
•ETYM The form τρικ-τύς supposes a velar enlargement, as seen also in τρισσός, τριττός, τριξός (from *τριχ-ι̯ός); an original voiceless -κ- is also conceivable, given Skt. triká- 'threefold'. This form would have been replaced by τριττύς on the model of τριττός. The third variant τριπτύς might have been introduced after τρί-πτυχος 'threefold'. The variation more probably points to a Pre-Greek word (not in Fur.).

•VAR Hellenized in τριφύλλινος (Gal. 14, 19).
•ETYM From the toponym.

τριχάϊκες (ῑ) [m.pl.] epithet of the Dorians (τ 177, Hes. Fr. 191). ◂GR▸ •ETYM Probably 'hair-shaking', from θρίξ, gen. τριχός 'hair', like κορυθ-άϊξ (χ 132) 'helmet-shaking': see for instance Leumann 1950: 65, in antiquity already Apollon. apud sch. τ 177, EM. Since early times, the word was taken to refer to the three tribes of the Dorians (thus already Hes. l.c.). Differently, Pisani Arch. glott. ital. 50 (1965): 1ff.

Τροίη [f.] 'the land of Troy'; in the Iliad already used for the town, Ilios. ◂LW Anat.▸
•ETYM The word is no doubt derived from Τρῶες 'Trojans'. It has often been remarked that Troia was the land, not just the city (e.g. Page 1959: 294). It is explicitly stated by Del Valle Muñoyerro Glotta 75 (1999): 68-81 that it did not indicate the town, but this is clearly wrong (cf. the name-epithet formulae εὐτείχεος, εὔπυργος, εὐρυάγυια, ἐξαλαπάξαι) and unnecessary; the meaning gradually shifted to the town (going to Troy always included fighting for Ilios).
The annals of Tudḫaliya IV, from around the end of the 15th c., mention Wi-lu-ša (= Ilios) and Ta-ru-(ú-)i-ša at the end of an expedition to the north. This must be understood as "[the city of] Wilusa and [the land of] Troy." Ta-ru-(ú-)i-ša must be read /Trūisa/. Thus the original form had Trū-, which surfaced in Greek as Τρω-.

τροφαλίς, τροφή, τρόφις, etc. ⇒ τρέφω.

τρύβλιον [n.] kind of drinking vessel of unknown shape and varying size (Ar., LXX, Ev. Matt.), also a measure of capacity (medic. etc.). ◂PG▸ •ETYM Usually explained as 'bowl, dish' or 'bottle, jug'. No etymology. Fur.: 367 compares τρίβανον and considers the word to be Pre-Greek.

'winegrower, harvester', fem. -ήτρια (D., Poll.), -ητήριον [n.] 'wine-press' (gloss.); προτρυγητήρ, -τής name of a star which rises shortly before the vintage (since end V[a]). 5. τρύγος [n., m.] = τρύγη (*Et. PN Τρυγ-αῖος (Ar.), -ία name of a Bacchante (Nonn.). 7. διατρύγιος, of ὄρχος (ω 342), perhaps 'ripening at different times'; but acc. to Schwyzer 1950: 449 'interspersed with fruit trees or vines'; Προτρύγαιος epithet of Dionysus (Ach. Tat., Ael.), θεοὶ Π. (Poll.); προτρύγαια· ἑορτὴ Διονύσου καὶ Ποσειδῶνος (H.). Also τρύγει, τρυγεῖ, τρύσκει = ξηραίνει, -εται '[trans.] dries up, [intrans.] becomes dry' (Zonar., Theognost., H.), ἔτρυγεν· ἐξηράνθη, ἐπὶ λίμνης 'was dried' (about a pool of water) (H.); for the meaning, compare τρύγη and τρυγαβόλια· εἰς ἃ καρποὺς ξηροὺς ἀπετίθεντο 'in which dried fruits are stored' (H.).

•ETYM No etymology, unlesss related to ►τρύξ. The words ὀτρύγη (-χη cod., alphabetically misplaced)· χόρτος, καλάμη 'pen, fodder, stalk or straw' (H., also medic. apud Gal.?), and ὀτρυγηφάγος epithet of an ass (Archil. 97; in H. also ἀ-) are unrelated: the traditional explanation from τρυγη-φάγος with prothetic ὀ- must be rejected. It rather means ἀκανθο-φάγος; compare OE risci bita 'panicle-, bulrush-biter' = 'horse'.

•DER τρύγοιπέω [v.] (Suid.).
•ETYM From ►τρύξ 'must' and a second member from a verb meaning 'to sieve'. Frisk connects -οιπος with Germanic seip-* 'to trickle', but this is connected by LIV[2] with εἴβω 'to let flow'. Alternatively, one may derive -οιπος from PIE seik^w-* 'to pour' as reconstructed by LIV[2], whence, among others, OHG sīhan 'to sieve' is derived. Yet see ►ἰκμάς 'moisture', where the root is reconstructed as seik-*.

τρύζω [v.] 'to coo, murmur' (I 311, Hp., Hell. and late epic). ◄ONOM►

•COMP Also with ἐπι-, etc.
•DER τρυγών, -όνος [f.] 'turtle-dove' (Ar., Hell. and late epic), also as a fish name, 'stingray' (Epich., Arist.+); the naming motive is unclear: a euphemism? Diminutive τρυγόνιον [n.] (AP, Them.), also 'pigeonry' (Ps.-Dsc.), -ιος [adj.] (Opp.); τρυσμός [m.] 'cooing, etc.' (Hp., Gal., H.). Furthermore, τρυλ(λ)ίζω (ἐν-) 'to chuckle, babble' (Ar. Th. 341, Hp., Poll.), whence -ισμός (Hp.); for the suffix, cf. θρυλίζω (see ►θρῦλος).
•ETYM Onomatopoeia in -ύζω, like γρύζω, ἰύζω, etc.; cf. ►τρίζω.

(Polyzel. Com. V-IV[a]).

•ETYM Without certain etymology. The traditional connection with τάργανον 'spoiled wine, wine-vinegar' is neither phonetically nor semantically convincing. The formal identity with τρυγάω is remarkable, especially since both words refer to viniculture and wine production. Possibly, τρυγάω originally referred both to the harvesting and the first pressing of grapes, but was ousted from the second meaning by τραπέω. Porzig ZII 5 (1927): 271f. pleads for Pre-Greek origin of both τάργανον and τρύξ, as well as that of related τρύγη.

•DER 1. τρύπ-ημα, -ημάτιον [n.] 'bore-hole, hole' (com., Arist., Hero), with ἐκ- also 'chippings made by boring' (Thphr.). 2. -ησις (ἐκ-, περι-) [f.] 'boring (through)' (Hp., Arist., Thphr.+). 3. -ητής [m.] 'borer' (Pl. Cra.), -ητήρ [m.] 'pierced vessel' (Ph. Bel.). Further τρύπανον [n.] 'borer, push drill, trepan, strands of wood for making fire' (since ι 385), whence -άνιον, -ανώδης, -ανικός, -ανίζω, -ανισμός (rare and late); also -άνη [f.] 'id.' (Hdn. Gr., H.), -ανία [f.] 'thong of a push drill' (Poll.). A back-formation is τρύπη, τρῦπα [f.] 'hole' (Hdn. Epim., AP, H., Eust.). As a first member in τρυπ-αλώπηξ 'a fox which slips in through a hole', designation of a cunning person (Com. Adesp.).
•ETYM Probably related to ►τρύω, whence also τρύχω; further afield are ►τρίβω, ►τείρω, and ►τετραίνω. Because of the late and rare attestation of τρύπη, the verb can hardly be denominative. It is more likely to be an old iterative formation. BSl. trup-, troup- has been compared, as in ORu. trupъ 'trunk, (field of) corpses', Ru. trupъ 'corpse', OPr. trupis 'log'; however, the circumflex vowel of BSl. (from PIE treup-; see LIV[2]) does not match Greek -ῡ-, which is also found in τρύχω. A better candidate is PSlav. tryti 'to rub' < truH-; see LIV[2] s.v. treuH-. In that case, τρῡπάω would have a root enlargement -p-*.

τρῡτάνη [f.] 'tongue of a balance' (IA). ◄GR►
•DER τρυτανεύω [v.] 'to weigh' (gloss.).
•ETYM Noun in -τάνη from the verb τρύω; it probably refers to the opening in which the tongue moves, "foramen, intra quod linum vel lingua, de quo examinatio est" (sch. on Pers. 1, 7 as an explanation of the borrowing Lat. trutina).

τρυφάλεια [f.] name of a helmet (Il., χ 183), literally 'provided with four φάλοι', = κόρυς τετράφαλος. ◄IE k^{w}etuer-* 'four'►

The Balto-Slavic cognates (OCS tryjǫ, tryti 'to rub', Lith. trūnė́ti, 1sg. trūniù 'to spoil, putrefy, decay') point to a root treuH-*; cf. LIV. 'sweets, dessert' (com., X., Arist., etc.), whence -ημάτια, -ηματώδης, -ηματίζω, -ημα-τισμός. On ►τράγος, see s.v.
•ETYM The vocalic alternation in τρώγ- : τραγ- is explained by LIV^2 s.v. $treh_3(\hat{g})$-* as a secondary zero grade τραγ- for original *τρωγ-. LIV^2 also connects ToAB trāsk-, ToB treṣṣäṃ 'to chew', from a PTo. root tərsk-*; see also Adams 1999: 319 s.v. tresk. Yet the IE connection is very doubtful, and had better be abandoned (the secondary zero grade is doubtful, and there is no root treg-*). In view of the vocalic vacillation in τρώξανα, τραύξανα, and τρωξαλλίς, these are Pre-Greek words. As there is no IE etymology for τρώγω, this word could also be Pre-Greek (though τρώξανα, τραύξανα, and τρωξαλλίς are probably not derived from it).

IV[a]); τυκ-ίον = τύκος (Eust.), τυκ-άνη [f.] 'thrashing equipment, flail' (Theognost., Eust., gloss.), -άνιον [n.] 'id.' (pap., gloss.). Also τυτάνη· ὄργανόν τι, ᾧ χρῶνται εἰς τὸν ἀλοητὸν τοῦ σίτου 'tool which is used for threshing grain' (H.), τρυγάνη· ἡ τὸν σῖτον ἀλοῶσα 'she who is threshing grain' (gloss.), after τρυγάω?

•ETYM Traditionally, τύκος is derived from a PIE root *teuk-, as in OCS tъknǫti, Ru. tknut' 'to thrust' and, with a different ablaut, CS is-tukati 'to cut from metal, pour, found', OCS tykati, Ru. týkat' 'to thrust', Latv. tũkât 'knead, press'; cf. LIV² s.v. *teuk-. The aspirated forms τύχος, -ίζω are supposed to be due to the influence of τεύχω. Yet the consonant variation rather seems to demonstrate that the word is Pre-Greek; influence of τεύχω is improbable, as its meaning is not specific enough.

•VAR Also -ῡ- (AP); τύλος [m.] 'bulge, callosity, hunch, nail, peg' (X., Ar., Nic., Hero, Str., etc.).

•COMP τυλ(ο)-υφάντης [m.] 'cushion weaver' (Hyp., pap. VI-VII[p]), -ειδής 'bulge-, callosity-like' (medic.), περίτυλος 'surrounded by τύλοι' (Delos), 'callous' (Sor.).

•DER 1. Diminutives τυλ-ίον [n.] 'small nail' (Hero et al.), -άριον [n.] to τύλη or τύλος (pap. and inscr. III-VI[p]), -αίνιον [n.] 'small callosity' (Aret.), from *τύλαινα after φλύκταινα? 2. -εῖον [n.] 'pad' (S. Fr. 468, Hell. pap.). 3. τύλαρος· μάνδαλος, τυλαρώσας· μανδαλώσας (H.). 4. τύλ-ων, -ωνος [m.] 'provided with a callous skin' (gloss.). 5. -όεις 'callous' (Nic.), -ώδης 'id.' (Plu., medic.). 6. τυλόομαι 'to get callosities', -όω 'to make callous' (X., Theoc., medic. etc.), also with ἀπο-, ἐκ-, περι- etc. Thence τυλωτός, τετυλωμένος 'knobbed' (Hdt.); thence (ἐκ-, περι-)τύλωσις (medic. etc.), adj. -ωτικός; -ωμα [n.] (Poll., H.). 7. τυλ-ίσσω, -ίττω 'to make into a bulge, twine into a ball, swathe (up)' (com., Hp., Ev. Matt., Luc., Gal., etc.), almost only prefixed, especially with ἐν-; τύλ-ιγμα (H.) as an explanation of ἕλιξ, τυλιγμός [m.] 'swathing' (sch.). Backformation ἐντύλη [f.] 'swaddling cloth' (pap. II[a]). Unclear is τύλλος [m.] 'box, chest' vel sim. (D. C. 79, 20).

•ETYM Because of its vacillating meaning and its short form, τύλη, -ος can easily be provided with an etymology. Various cognates have been proposed: the Balto-Slavic group of OPr. tūlan [adv.] 'many', Lith. tū́las 'several, rather many', tulìs 'nail on a car, plug, nail of an axle, etc.', OCS tylъ, Ru. tyl 'neck', but these presuppose *tuH-; Germanic ON þollr 'tree, peg', OE þoll, MLG dolle, MoHG Dolle 'thole', MLG (Westfäl.) dülle 'booty', all seemingly < PIE *tul-no-; also, Lat. tullius 'gush', W twl 'round elevation', Alb. tul 'piece of meat without bone, roe', Skt. tū́lam [n.] 'plume, fan, bundle, etc.'. Greek σάλος 'unquiet movement of the sea, gulf of waves' (cf. Lat. tullius) has also been connected as *tu̯l(H)o-. Yet none of these IE words is a close match for τύλη in form and meaning, so the word may rather be Pre-Greek.

'to rest in the grave' (S., E., Ar., etc.), ἐν-τυμβεύομαι 'to rest in the grave' (Ph.), whence -εία [f.] 'burial' (Suid.), -ευμα [n.] 'grave' (S.), 'corpse' (E.). Several hypostases, e.g. ἐπιτύμβ-ιος (A., S., Plu., AP etc.), -ίδιος (A. [lyr.] etc.) 'at or on the grave, belonging to the grave'.

•ETYM Beside τύμβος, we find Corcyr. τῦμος (VI[a]; the length is metrically ensured) with the same meaning. The variation shows that the word is Pre-Greek (not recognized by Fur.). Lat. tumulus 'earth-hill' and Arm. t'umb 'landfill, earthen wall' may contain the same Pre-Greek/Mediterranean word. It is possible that Celtic forms such as MIr. tomm [m.] 'small hill', MW tom [m., f.] 'dung, mound' belong here, as well.

τύμβος 2 [m.] in ὦ τύμβε, referring to an old man (Ar. Lys. 372), γέροντα τύμβον (E. Med. 1209), γέροντος ... τύμβου (Heracl. 167); τυμβογέρων· ἐσχατογήρως καὶ παρηγμένος τῇ διανοίᾳ (H., Ar. Fr. 35, *Com. •ETYM Formation like ὄργανον, etc. Traditionally (e.g. EM 771) connected with τύπτω (whence the spelling τύπανον), with a nasal of PIE or secondary origin. Others have regarded it as a Semitic loanword (cf. Aram. tuppa, Hebr. top, etc. 'to beat the drum'), with folk-etymological adaptation to τύπτω and the instrument names in -ανον. Fur.: 287 suggests that the instrument, used in the cult of the Magna Mater and Dionysus, rather comes from Asia Minor. The variant may also point to Pre-Greek origin (prenasalization).

•ETYM The variation τύρβη - σύρβη points to a palatal /t/ and therefore to a Pre-Greek word (not in Fur.). A connection with Lat. turba 'confusion, noise, crowd, troop' and turma 'troop, squadron, crowd' is difficult. Latin turba might be a loanword from Greek, cf. E-M.

•ETYM τυφλός belongs to the numerous adjectives in -λός that indicate physical or psychical defects, e.g. σιφλός, χωλός, τραυλός, δειλός (Chantraine 1933: 238). No exact correspondence exists outside Greek. The root could be the same as in OIr. dub 'black' < *d^hub^h-u-, and Go. daufs, ON daufr, OHG toub 'deaf' < PIE *d^houb^h-o-. The original meaning seems to have been 'obstructed, clogged, dark'. Due to the short u in Celtic, the adjective cannot be derived from the verbal root PIE *d^huh_2- (cf. ► τύφομαι 'to smoke').

Thus, one might reconstruct PIE *d^hub^h- 'to hit'. Yet the isolated position of the Greek gloss calls for caution: the technical meaning 'wedge' may have arisen in various ways.

•ETYM All verbal forms seem to be based on the present. There are no exact correspondences of τύφ- outside Greek. It is thought to be derived from the PIE root *$d\underline{u}eh_2$- / *duh_2- 'to smoke' (see ►θύω, also ►θυμός and ►θύμος) by means of an enlargement *-b^h-. See LIV^2 s.v. *$d^h\underline{u}eh_2$-. ►τυφλός is probably unrelated, but see s.v.

•VAR Cypr. in ὐ τύχα = ἐπι τύχῃ (also ἰ(ν) τύχαι), also ὔ-χηρος [f.] 'handsel', corresponding to Att. τὰ ἐπίχειρα.
•ETYM Traditionally, ὐ is identified with Skt. ut-, ud- 'upwards, up', Go. ut 'out(wards)', MoHG aus, etc. < PIE ud*. The analysis of ὔχηρος seems certain, but for ὐ τύχα, other analyses are possible (Cypr. ὐν = ὀν 'ἀνά', Risch Kratylos 10 (1965): 92; or from earlier σὺν τύχᾳ, Thumb-Scherer 1959: 172).
The same preposition has also been claimed to be present in the expression υϝαις ζαν u-wa-i-se za-ne 'διὰ βίου (?)' ὕαινα [f.] 'hyena' (Hdt., Arist. et al.), also the name of a sea-fish 'Charax puntazzo' (Numen. apud Ath., Ael.); with the same meaning also ὑαινίς [f.] (Epich.); see Thompson 1947 s.v. and Strömberg 1943: 100f. ◂GR?▸
•DER ὑαίν-(ε)ιος 'of the hyena' (Plin., Cyran.), -ίτης [m.] designation of a stone (probably after the color).
•ETYM Derived from ὗς 'swine' on the model of λέαινα, λύκαινα, etc. DELG thinks that the animal resembled a swine by its airs and its bristly hair. Yet the hyena is a species of its own and looks more like a dog than a sow; could it be that ὕαινα replaces a loanword or a Pre-Greek word?

ὑάκινθος [m., f.] 'hyacinth' (Ξ 348, Sapph., Thphr., Theoc., Paus. et al.); designation of a blue cloth or a blue color (LXX, Ph., J., pap.); also of a precious stone (late). ◂PG▸ •DER ὑακίνθ-ινος 'of the hyacinth, hyacinth-colored' (Od., E., X., Samos IV^a, etc.), -ώδης 'hyacinth-like' (Dsc.), -ίζω [v.] 'to resemble a hyacinth' (Plin.). Also the name of a Laconian youth, who according to legend was killed by Apollo with an unfortunate throw of the discus. He probably was a Pre-Greek god who was superseded by Apollo, and sank to be a mere hero; but he also merged with this god to become Ἀπόλλων Ὑάκινθος (-θος). Thence τὰ Ὑακίνθια (Cret. ϝακ-), name of a Doric festival (Hdt., Th., X.), Ὑακίνθιος (Cret. Βακ-) [m.] Doric month-name (Sparta, Rhodos, Thera, Crete, etc.). On the Ionic sound substitution in Ὑάκινθος for original ϝάκινθος, see Schwyzer: 224.
•ETYM A clear Pre-Greek word, cf. Fur.: 242, 377 (but not with a prothetic u-!). It is disputed whether ὑάκινθος is related to Lat. vaccīnium 'blueberry, whortleberry'; Deroy Glotta 35 (1956): 185ff. and Meillet MSL 15 (1908-1909): 162 consider both words to be independent loans from a Mediterranean language, to be connected with Lat. bāca 'berry' and Gr. Βάκχος.

(Thphr., Str.), -όεις 'glass-color' (AP), -ώδης 'glass-like' (medic.). 2. ὑαλ-ᾶς [m.] 'glass-maker' (late inscr.); -ωμα [n.] name of an eye-disease of horses (Hippiatr.; cf. γλαύκωμα); diminutive ὑέλιον [n.] 'mirror' (Suid.); hence (or from ὕελος?) ὑ(ε)λι-άριος [m.] (Asia Minor). 3. ὑαλ-ίζω (ὑελ-) [v.] 'to have glass-color' (Dsc., Ph. Byz. et al.).
•ETYM A Pre-Greek word, cf. Fur.: 351; it may have had palatal l^y, cf. the variant ὕελλος. This may also explain the coloring of the preceding a to e. The ancient grammarians, such as Phryn., call ὕαλος Attic, and ὕελος Hellenistic. There is a remarkable similarity with the first member of the North-European name for amber, suali-ternicum (called "Scythian" by Plin. HN 37,33). A similar identity of the words for 'glass' and 'amber' is found in OGm. glēsum [Plin., Tac.] 'amber' and OHG glas.

•VAR codd. ὕβος (for ὔ-?) [m.] 'hunchback, hump', of a camel, a Cyprian ox (Arist.), ὕβε [voc.] (Theoc. 5,43), perhaps metrically conditioned.
•DER ὑβόομαι 'to become hunchbacked' (Gal.), ὕβ-ωμα [n.] 'hump' (or enlarged from ὕβος?), -ωσις [f.] 'hunchbackedness' (Hp., Gal.).
•ETYM The element -β- in ὑβός is reminiscent of words like στραβός, κλαμβός, and other words for corporeal defects (Chantraine 1933: 261); ὑβός may have been influenced by these. A convincing etymology has not been found. Petersson 1918: 74 compares Lith. subinẽ 'hindmost, back, bottom', which would have been derived from subas* = ὕβος. The word may well be Pre-Greek.

•DER ὑβρίζω, Dor. (Theoc.) -ίσδω, aor. ὑβρ-ίσαι, pass. -ισθῆναι, etc. 'to be arrogant or unbounded, to exert violence, offend, abuse' (Il.), often with prefix, e.g. ἀφ-, ἐν-, ἐξ-, ἐφ-, καθ-. Derivatives: 1. ὕβρ-ισμα (ἐν-) [n.] 'arrogant action, etc.', also object of it (Hdt., E., D., Plu. etc.). 2. -ισμός [m.] 'id.' (A. Fr. 179 = 485 M.). 3. -ισις (only with ἀνθ-) [f.] 'counter-abuse' (comm. Arist.). 4. -ιστής (ἐφ-) [m.] 'violator, offender' (N 633 [cf. -ιστήρ], Od., etc.), fem. -ιστις (EM); -ιστήρ [m.] 'id.' (v.l. N 633, Opp., Nonn., AP), fem. -ίστρια (LXX). 5. -ιστος 'arrogant, scoffing' (Pherecr., Pl. Com.), grades of comparison -ιστότερος, -ιστότατος (Hdt. 3, 81 [v.l. -ιστικώτερον], Att.). 6. -ιστικός 'id.' (Att., Arist., etc.). 7. ἐφύβριστος 'contumelious, disgraceful' (LXX, Plu., Man., Vett. Val. etc.). Also ὑβρίς, -ίδος [f.] name of a nocturnal bird of prey, perhaps 'eagle-owl, Strix bubo' (Arist., H.).

•ETYM No certain explanation. The -β- and initial ὑ- hardly look IE, so the word could well be Pre-Greek. Frisk is sympathetic to the connection with the prefix / preposition ►ὑ-, but this means nothing. Nikolaev Glotta 80 (2002): 211-230 assumes that ὕβρις contains the root of ἥβη and, with many additional assumptions, reconstructs i̯oHg^{w}ri-*. But as the Wetter-rule that he assumes is probably wrong, we would expect *ὠβρι-, and the construction must be rejected. Note that ἥβη is always a positive notion, whereas ὕβρις certainly is not.

•ETYM Traditionally explained as a compound of PIE h$_1$su-* 'well, good' (see ►ἐύς) and 'to live' (see ►ζώω and ►βίος), with s-stem inflexion: IE h$_1$su-g^{w}ih$_3$-es-*. Initial ὑ- instead of εὐ- would be due to laryngeal loss in the compound. A close correspondence seems to be found in Av. hu-jiiāiti- [f.] 'a good life'. However, Weiss MSS 55 (1994): 151f. much more convincingly assumes that it derives from h$_2$iu-g^{w}ih$_3$-es-* 'having eternal life'; he compares Lat. iūgis 'constant' and Av. yauuaē-jī- 'living forever'.

As 'grandson': a. υἱωνός (Hom., Theoc., Plu., late inscr. and pap.), plur. υἱωνεῖς· υἱῶν υἱέες (H.), after υἱεῖς; fem. υἱωνή 'granddaughter' (J., gramm.). b. ὑ(ι)ιδοῦς (Pl., X., D., Arist. etc.), ὑ(ι)ιδεύς (Isoc., H.); fem. ὑϊδῆ (pap. I^a, Poll., H.).
•ETYM The o-stem in υἱός is secondary against the υ-stem in υἱύς; perhaps it arose by dissimilation. The (proterodynamic) inflexion of υἱύς shows the full grade *-eu- of the suffix in υἱέος, υἱέι and υἱεῖ, υἱέες and υἱεῖς, du. υἱέε, υἱεῖ, and the zero grade *-u- (which would point to hysterodynamic inflection) in υἷος, υἷι (with Aeolic retraction of accent?), υἷές, υἷε. The generalized zero grade is limited to the epic, with the exception of Thess. gen. hυιος. The acc. υἱέα, υἱέας as well as υἱύν, υἱύνς (Gort., etc.) must be innovations.
The same preform PIE *suH-iu- yielded ToB soy, ToA se, gen. seyo 'son'. Most other languages have a different suffix in *suH-nu-: Skt. sūnú- 'son', Av. hunu- 'offspring', Lith. sūnùs, OCS synъ, Go. sunus, OHG sunu 'son'. These nouns are probably derived from PIE *suH- 'to bring forth' as in Skt. sū́te 'to give birth', sūta- 'son'; OIr. suth 'fruit' < *su(H)-tu- 'birth, fruit'. Thus, PIE suH-iu-, suH-nu- must be interpreted as 'produce of the body'.
The absence of the suffix *-ter- in 'son', as opposed to the words for 'father, mother, daughter, brother', is striking; perhaps PIE *suH-n/iu- replaced a different word for 'son', e.g. the one continued in Skt. putrá-, Av. puϑra-.

(A., E.), from *ὑλάζω? Also ὕλασμα [n.] (Cyran.). On the hero Ὕλας, see Kretschmer Glotta 14 (1925): 33ff.
•ETYM Probably an onomatopoeic word for 'howling, barking', compare Lat. ululāre 'to howl', ulula 'owl', Skt. ululí- 'crying loudly', úlūka- [m.] 'owl', Lith. ulúoti 'to howl', etc., and in Greek ▸ὀλολύζω. For -άω, one may compare the semantically close verbs βοάω, γοάω, etc. The suffix -(α)κτ- is regarded as expressive by Frisk (see ▸πυρακτέω), but it may have been a Pre-Greek suffix; in fact, the word as a whole may have been Pre-Greek.

ὕλη [f.] 'forest, wood, timber, firewood, shrubbery' (Il.), 'stuff, matter' (Arist., Plb., medic., etc.); also = τὸ καθίζον τοῦ οἴνου ἢ τοῦ ὕδατος (Phot.), 'sediment, mud, slime, bodily secretion' (Ar. Fr. 879, UPZ 70, 9 [II^a], Hell. and late medic.); cf. ▸ὗλις. ◂IE? *suol-h_2- or *$h_1$eus-l-h_2 'firewood'▸

(Arist.), -ωρέω [v.] (Thess.V^a); thence ὑληώρεας εὐνάς [acc.pl.] (Nic. Th. 55), ὑληρεύς· νομεὺς ἐν ὕλῃ φυλάττων H.; ὑλομήτρα· εἶδος σκώληκος (H.). As a second member in ἔνυλος 'provided with matter, material' (Arist., late).
•DER 1. Adj.: ὑλήεις, Dor. -άεις 'rich of wood, woody' (epic poet. Il.), -ώδης 'id.' (Th., S., X. etc.), 'muddy' (Dsc., Plu. et al.), -ιμος 'belonging to the wood' (E.), -ικός 'bodily, material' (Arist. etc.), -αῖος 'woody, wooded, in the forest, material' (Hell. and late), Ὑλαίη [f.] name of a wooded region on the Borysthenes (Hdt.), -ῷος 'belonging to matter' (Orph. Fr. 353); -ειῶτα [voc.] epithet of Πάν (AP 6, 106; after Πὰν ὀρειώτας AP 9,824). 2. PN Ὑλεύς name of a dog (X.). 3. ὕλημα [n.], mostly pl. 'bushes', -ηματικός [adj.] (Thphr.). 4. Verbs: a. ὑλάζομαι, aor. -άσασθαι 'to fetch wood' (Att. inscr., Poll., H.), -ασία [f.] 'the fetching of wood' (Att. inscr.), -άστρια [f.]

'wood-fetcher' (Phot.). b. ὑλίζω, -ίσαι, ptc.pf. -ισμένος 'to clean, clear, filter' (Cratin. 354, Pl. Ti. 69 a, Archyt., LXX, Dsc., pap., etc.), also with prefix, esp. δι-; -ιστήρ (δι-) [m.] 'filtering-cloth, sieve' (medic., pap.), -ιστήριον (δι-) [n.] (pap., sch., H.), διύλισμα [n.] 'clarified fluid' (Gal.), -ισις [f.] 'clearing filtering' (Suid.), -ισμός [m.] 'clearing, cleaning' (Clem. Al.), ἀφύλισμα γάλακτος as an explanation of ὀρὸς γάλακτος H., -ισμὸς χωμάτων, παρ- ~ τενάγους 'removing the mud, cleaning' (pap.).

•ETYM The meaning 'mud' can easily be explained by a recent development from 'matter' to 'solid matter, dregs, secretion' as against clear wine and pure water, as appears already from the explanation by Phot. as τὸ καθίζον τοῦ οἴνου ἢ τοῦ ὕδατος. The earlier etymologies connecting ὕλη with Lat. silva or with ξύλον must be rejected. If the original meaning was 'firewood', one may follow Vine 1999b: 573 in deriving ὕλη with Cowgill's Law (*o > Gr. υ in certain environments) from PIE *suol-h₂-, to the root *suel- 'to smoulder'; see LIV² s.v. *su̯el-. Alternatively, starting from the same meaning, connection with ON usli [m.] 'glowing ashes', from *h₁eus-l-h₂ to the root of εὕω, Lat. ūrere 'to burn', etc., may be envisaged (Wackernagel 1916: 185).

ὖλις [f.] 'mud' (pap. IV-III^a, LXX, EM). ◂?▸
•VAR Also ὕλις.
•ETYM Frisk suggests that ὖλις might have arisen from ἰλύς 'mud, slime' by way of contamination with ὑλίζω, ὕλη 'mud' (cf. IG 1², 94: 20; 23 beside 2², 2498: 9). This solution does not inspire much confidence.

•DER Possessive adjective ὑμέτερος, Dor. also ὑμός, Aeol. ὔμμος 'your'.
•ETYM The acc. ὑμέ, ὔμμε go back to *usme, and the nom. ὑμές, ὔμμε arose by analogy with the nominal inflexion; later also ὑμεῖς < *-έες, and a new acc. ὑμέας, ὑμᾶς were created. Furthermore, the gen. ὑμῶν, ὑμέων, ὑμμέων, and dat. ὑμῖν, ὑμίν, ὔμμι(ν) were formed.

Hp. VII^p); ἐξυμεν-ίζω [v.] 'to remove a film', -ιστήρ [m.] 'knife for flaying' (medic.).
•ETYM Except for the quantity of the υ-, the Greek word is formally matched by Skt. syū́man- [n.] 'band, throng, bridle'. For the verbal root, compare Lat. suere, sūtum 'to sew', Go. siujan, Lith. siū́ti 'id.'< PIE *siuH-C- from earlier *siH-u-C-, cf. Skt. sī́vyatu 'to sew'. Formerly, Hitt. šumanza- 'rope, snare' used to be compared too, but Melchert 2003 has shown that the word means '(bul)rush' and must be posited as šumanzan- (cf. Kloekhorst 2008 s.v.); it is therefore unrelated to ὑμήν.

ὑμήν 2, -ένος [m.] 'wedding-cry', secondarily 'god of wedding', 'hymen' (trag., Ar., Theoc., Opp., Ovid., etc.), usually in connection with ὑμέναιος 'id.', also 'wedding' (Σ 493, Hes. Sc., Pi., trag., Ar., Catull. etc.), Aeol. ὑμήνἄος (Sapph., Cyrene), ὑμήναιος (Call.), e.g.'Υμὴν ὦ Ὑμέναι' ἄναξ (E. Tr. 314). ◂PG?▸

•ETYM Frisk insists on the identity of the wedding-cry with ►ὑμήν 1 in the sense of 'membrana virginalis'. A different, non-IE (Pre-Greek) origin of the wedding-cry is assumed by Muth Wien.Stud. 67 (1954): 5ff. Similarly Fur.: 383, but without further argumentation.

•COMP ὑμνῳδ-ός [m.] 'hymn-singer', whence -ία, -έω (A., E., Pl., etc.), πολύυμνος 'with many songs, much sung of' (h. Hom. 26, 7, Anacr., E. etc.).
•DER 1. diminutive ὑμν-άριον [n.] (Lyd. Mens.), adjective -ώδης 'full of lauds, praising' (Philostr.), -ικός 'consisting of hymns' (Didyma II-III^p). 2. ἐφύμνιον [n.] 'refrain' (A. R., Call. etc.), -ιάζω [v.] (Eratosth.). 3. ὑμνέω [v.] 'to sing (a song), praise, glorify in a chant' (Hes., h. Hom., Alc., Sapph., IA, etc.), often with prefix, e.g. ἐφ-, ἀν-, καθ-, ἐξ-; ὑμνητής [m.] 'glorifier' (Pl., Att. inscr.), -τήρ 'id.' (AP, Opp.), fem. -τρια (Attica, Pergam.), -στρια (Pergam.), -τρίς (Poll. v.l.), -σις [f.] 'the praising' (LXX, D. S.), -τικός 'praising' (Str.).
•ETYM No certain etymology. It could be derived from ὑμήν < *siuH-mn 'tie, seam' as *siuH-mn-o- 'construction of song(s)' (compare formally λιμήν : λίμνη, etc., semantically MoHG Liedgefüge). This explanation can be supported by an antique conception (e.g. ὑφάνας ὕμνον in B.), but a derivation of ὕμνος from the root of ὑφ-ή, ὑφ-αίνω is phonetically difficult (only PGr. *bn, g^wn > μν, not e.g. PGr. $*p^hn$).

Alternatively, ὕμνος could be connected with ὑμήν 'wedding-cry', cf. Maas Phil. 66 (1907): 590ff. The word was also considered to be a Mediterranean loanword, for instance by Autran 1938: 33, and by Fur.: 383. The latter regards ὕμνος as Pre-Greek without further comment; Pre-Greek origin may be suggested by the sequence -μν-. Yet, another solution would be to connect ὕμνος with Skt. sā́man- 'song of praise' (< sh₂omen-*) and Hitt. išḫamai- 'song, hymn' to PIE sh₂-* 'to bind'; ὕμνος would then require a preform sh₂omn-os*, Mallory & Adams 1997: 520a.
Vine 1999b: 576 reconstructs suon(H)-mo-* with development su̯on- > su̯un-, analogous to that of Tu̯oR-. This seems phonetically preferable to sh₂omn-o-, on account of the conditioning of the change of o* to Gr. υ, on which see Vine op.cit.

•DER Diminutive ὕνιον (pap. IVᵖ).
•ETYM Already in antiquity (Plu. 2, 670a), ὕνις was connected with ὗς 'swine'. The ploughshare would have been compared to a swine browsing the earth. A parallel case is provided by W swch 'swine-snout' and 'plough-share'. Brugmann IF 28 (1911): 366ff. unconvincingly explains ὕνις as a compound of ὗς and a word for 'snout' (to MHG snouwen 'to snuffle'), with the ending after ὀφνίς, so from IE su-sn-i-*; then the geminate would have to be old.
Fur.: 387 regards the word as Pre-Greek on account of the incidental gemination.

ὕπαρ [n.] 'vision', as opposed to ὄναρ 'deceiving dream' (τ 547, υ 90), 'true and visible appearance, reality, being awake', often as an adverb 'while being awake, in reality, really' (Pi., IA, Epid., etc.). ◂IE suep-ōr* 'sleep'▸
•VAR Indeclinable.

•VAR Adv. -ως.
•ETYM Probably contains a suffix -αλος, but the further analysis is unclear. The old onnection to φιάλη 'dish' is semantically uncompelling. The adjective is usually connected with ὑπερφυής 'extraordinary' and Lat. superbus, compounds with a second member in PIE *-$b^h(h_2)u$- 'being, arising'. With a dissimilation of υ - υ to υ - ι, ὑπερφίαλος could stem from *ὑπερφύαλος (Mastrelli Stud. ital. fil. class. 32 (1960): 109, De Lamberterie 1994), compare ὑπερφυής 'enormous' and ὑπέρφευ 'excessively'.

•DER ὑπηνήτης [m.] 'the beardy one' (Ω 348 = κ 279, AP, late prose).
•ETYM For 'beard', Greek has an innovation formed on the basis of PIE 'chin' in γένειον; further it has ►μύσταξ. Both πώγων 'beard' and ὑπήνη are without etymology. The older connection with a word āno/ā-* 'face' (to Skt. āná- 'face, mouth, nose' to the root *h_2nh_1- 'to breathe') is revived by Adams Glotta 64 (1986): 16f., who posits upo-āno/*eh_2-. Yet, this etymology is semantically unsatisfactory and formally difficult; see ►ἀπηνής and ►πρηνής for the formal problems.
Alternatively, the word has often (and understandably) been considered to be Pre-Greek (with folketymological conection with ὑπό). Pre-Greek indeed has a suffix -ήνη.

•ETYM A compound of ὑπ- and ►ἐρέτης 'rower', originally a sailors' expression. The literal meaning cannot have been 'under-rower'; rather, ὑπ- is a hypercharacterising prefix stressing the opposition to the higher κελευστής; cf. ὑπο-δμώς = δμώς. On the meaning and spread of ὑπηρέτης and its cognates, compare Kretschmer Glotta 18 (1929): 77f. and Fraenkel 1910: 190 (different on details). Gr. ὑπηρέσιον is an independent formation meaning 'cushion for rowers', metaphorically 'riding cushion' (Att. Hell. and late); it is probably a hypostasis ("lying under the ἐρέτης").

•ETYM Gr. ὕπνος goes back to PIE sup-no-*, as do Alb. gjumë and OCS sъnъ, Ru. son 'sleep'. With a different root ablaut, we find PIE suop-no-* in Arm. k'un, Celtic (OIr. súan, MW hun) and Baltic (Lith. sāpnas), and su̯epno-* in Germanic (ON svefn) and Tocharian (ToA ṣpäṃ, ToB ṣpane). Indo-Iranian (Skt. svápna-) and Lat. somnus could reflect either suepno-* or suopno-*. The presence of three different ablaut grades may point to an older athematic n-stem. For a complementary r-stem, which points to an older PIE r/n-stem, see ►ὕπαρ. The nouns were probably formed on the basis of the corresponding verbal root suep-/ sup- 'to fall asleep', cf. •ETYM Derived from ὑπόπτερος 'winged' (Pi., Ion. Att.), see ►πτερόν, the IE cognates of which go back to PIE petr-. Therefore, the Alcman variant ὑποπετρ-ίδιος could in theory preserve the PIE sequence petr-. Yet, since this would require separating ὑποπετρίδιος from all other Greek attestations of πτέρον and its derivatives, the Alcman form may be due to an idiosyncratic development of *ὑποπτερ-.

ὕπτιος [adj.] 'lying on one's back, bent backwards, reverse, downside up' (Il.), 'flat' (Hdt., etc.), metaph. 'inoperative, supine' (late), 'passive', of verbs (as opposed to ἀνύπτιος) 'not passive' (D. L.), παρύπτιος as a geometrical term beside ὕπτιος (Papp.); τὰ ὕπτια also 'belly', i.e. the upper side when lying ὕπτιος. ◂IE upo* 'below'▸ •DER ὑπτι-ότης [f.] 'reverse position, flat shape, slackness' (Thphr., Str. etc.). Verbs: 1. ὑπτι-άζω 'to bend (oneself) back, stalk along, be slack' (Att. Hell. and late), also with ἐξ-, etc.; -ασμα [n.] 'bending back, bent back figure' (A.), -ασμός [m.] 'bending back, aversion' (Hp., late prose). 2. ὑπτι-όομαι [v.] 'to turn back, be upset, supine, slow' (A., late prose), -ωσις [f.] 'slowness, aversion' (late medic.). 3. ὑπτι-άω (ptc. -όῳσα, subj. 3sg. -άῃσι) 'to bend oneself back' (Arat.).

ὕραξ, -ακος [m.] 'shrew-mouse' (Nic. Al. 37). ◂PG(S)▸ •ETYM The word is close in form to Lat. sōrex, -icis [m.] 'id.', and is probably related to it. The suffix -αξ is Pre-Greek, like (probably) the word itself; the Latin word may come from the same source. On Lat. o beside Gr. υ, cf. Fur.: 361. The older connection with Latin susurrus 'humming, whisper, etc.', Gr. ὕρον· σμῆνος. Κρῆτες 'beehive, swarm of bees (Cret.)' (H.), and the PIE root suer-* 'to resound' is semantically unconvincing, as is the supposed ablaut Gr. sur-* : Lat. su̯ōr-. Still, the IE etymology is defended by Vine 1999b: 572f., arguing for the possibility of an o-grade suor-* in Greek.

ὑράξ [adv.] · μίγδην, ἀναμίξ 'promiscuously' (H.), see also on θιλύρα.

•VAR Also ὑρράξ or ὕρραξ, if the word is Aeolic (Theognost. Can. 23).
•ETYM Perhaps a variant of εὑράξ (DELG)? There is no connection with ►ὕραξ.

ὕρχη [f.] 'earthen vessel used for salting fish, etc.' (Ar., Hell. pap., Poll., sch.). ◂PG▸ •ETYM A technical word, Aeolic acc. to Poll. and others. Lat. orca 'large-bellied vessel, tun', whence urceus 'pot, pitcher', may have been borrowed from Greek, as may Lat. urna 'water-, ash-pot'. Alternatively, both languages may have independently borrowed them from a Mediterranean language (thus also Fur.: 361, etc.).

•DER ὕσγινον [n.] name of a red pigment taken from the ὕσγη, also 'red cloak' (Nic., AP [both with ῑ due to metrical lengthening], pap., Plin., Dig. etc.).
•ETYM Pausanias (l.c., where the codices have ὗς [before γίνεται; probably haplography]) calls the word Galatian (Celtic?), identical to κόκκος 'kermes oak'. Fur.: 367 regards the word as Pre-Greek, because of the variants in ἰσγ-.

•VAR Dat. also -ῖνι (μάχεσθαι [verse-final] Β 863, Θ 56).
•DER ὑσμιναταί [m.pl.] name of a phyle (Epid.).
•ETYM If the word was inherited from PIE, we have to posit a basis *ὑσμός (with analogical -σμο- for *-μο-?) which can be compared with Skt. yudh-má- [m.] 'warrior', to IIr. Hiudh*- 'to battle' from PIE Hieudh*- 'to move'. Gr. ὑσμίνη can be explained as a derivative in *-īn- (cf. ῥηγμῖν-, σταμῖν-), remade into an ā-stem. Another derivative of *ὑσμός might be the PN Ὕσμων (Elis). Alternatively, ὑσμίνη could equally well be a loanword from Pre-Greek, given its suffixation.

ὕσπληξ, -ηγος [f., m.] 'triggering device for releasing footracers, for catching birds and animals, etc.' (Att. inscr. [end Va], Pl. Phdr. 254e, Hell. and late). It is unknown what the device actually looked like (a snare, small stick, or rope?). ◀PG?(V)▶ •VAR Dor. (Epid.) -ᾱκος; also (rarely) -ηγξ, -ηγγος, Dor. (Theoc.) -ᾱγξ.
•ETYM Traditionally analysed as a compound of ►πλήσσω and ὑσ- in ►ὕστερος, but the use of suffixless ὑσ- would be unique, and the semantics are hardly convincing. If this is indeed a compound with ►πλήσσω, the first part may reflect ὗς 'swine' (as already suggested by Eustathius Episcopus Thessalonicensis in a comm. to Dionysius Periegeta). In that case, the animal trap would reflect the oldest meaning. In view of the variant with prenasalization, however, Pre-Greek origin seems the most likely option (see also Jüthner Die Antike 15 (1939): 251).

ὕσσακος [m.] only ὑσσάκους· πασσάλους (EM 785, 7, Phot.); gen.pl. -άκων 'cunnus' (Ar. Lys. 1001); also ὕσσακος· ὑστακός (H.), = πάσσαλος (Theognost. Can. 24), ὕσταξ· πάσσαλος κεράτινος 'penis made of horn' (H.). ◀PG(V)▶ •VAR Also -αξ? (cf. s.v. ὕσσαξ).
•ETYM Probably a Pre-Greek word, given the suffix -ακός or -αξ. In the sense of πάσσαλος, it can hardly be separated from ὑσσός 'javelin'; as a vulgar expression in Ar., ὕσσακος perhaps alludes to ὗς as a substitute for χοῖρος, which is often used for 'cunnus' in comedy.

ὕσσαξ [?] 'sex of the woman' (Ar. Lys. 1001, gen.pl. ὑσσάκων).
•ETYM Ernout BSL 41 (1940-1941): 121[1] derives it from ὗς, with the suffix -ακ-; but this etymology is obviously wrong, as it would have given *ὕαξ. The word is no doubt a variant of ►ὕσσακος.

ὑσσός [m.] 'javelin', Lat. pīlum (Plb., D. H., Str., Plu.). ◀?▶
•ETYM Technical word of uncertain origin; no IE etymology is available. Bechtel BB 30 (1906): 271f. derives it from Carian, comparing PNs like Ὑσσισις, Ὑσσωλος, Μαύσσωλος. Lewy KZ 55 (1928): 30f. compares Assyr. ussu, Hebr. ḥēṣ 'arrow'. The word could well be Pre-Greek.

Epic byforms: ὑφάω in ὑφόωσι (η 105), ὑφανάω in ὑφανόωντας (Man. 6, 433).
Further nouns, probably back-formations: 1. ὑφή (παρ-, συν-, ἐφ-, γυναικο-) [f.] 'fabric' (trag., Pl., Arist., Hell. and late). 2. ὕφος [n.] 'id.' (Pherecr., Eub., Hell. and late).
•ETYM The Myc. form may prove that the root was *h₁uebʰ-. The chronology of the attestations suggests that ὑφαίνω is not a denominative from ὑφή, ὕφος, but was transformed from an older primary present, a nasal present (cf. the Skt. forms) or from a nominal form in *ubʰ-n- (thus LIV). Gr. ὑφή, ὕφος may be explained as PIE derivatives, or as back-formations within Greek. The hapax legomena ὑφόωσι, ὑφανόωντες are incidental formations of the epic language.
Cognate forms: Skt. pres. ubhnā́ti, inj. sám unap, pres. umbháti 'to bind, fetter', ū́rṇā-vābhi- 'spider' [m.], YAv. ubdaēna- [adj.] 'consisting of woven texture'; Alb. ven 'weave' (also from a nasal present?); OHG weban 'to weave, twist, spin'; ToA wäp-, ToB wāp- 'to weave'.

ὕφεαρ, -εαρος [n.] Arcad. name of the mistletoe, 'Viscum album' (Thphr., H. who has ὑφαίαρ). ◄?► •ETYM Traditionally derived from Cypr. ►ὐ- and *φέϝαρ, which would be a verbal noun to ἔφυν 'grew', following the explanation in H.: τὸ ἐπιφυόμενον ταῖς πεύκαις καὶ ἐλάταις 'what grows on firs'. This is quite doubtful, as a full grade φευ- from this root has further not been demonstrated in Greek with certainty (cf. on ►συφεός).

Perpillou therefore assumed that the word underwent dissimilation from *u-pʰuwar (doubtful); the note by Nikolaev Glotta 80 (2002): 221-230 is hardly acceptable. Connection with ►σῦφαρ 'wrinkled skin' (Pisani RILomb. 73:2 (1939-40): 27) is implausible, too.

•ETYM Old locative in *-i, as in ἦρι, ἄρτι, ἄντι, etc., derived from the adverb *up(-) as seen in ►ὕπατος, ►ὑπέρ, ►ὑπό. The enlarging -σ- has a parallel in Aeol. ὄψι, Hom., etc. ὀψέ 'late', in ἄψ beside ἄπ-ο, etc. In Latin, too, it was productive: ab(s)-, ec/ex-, sub(s)-. An additional *s to PIE *up- is also found in Celtic, e.g. OIr. ós 'above, over' < *oupso-, OIr. úasal 'high', W uchel, Gaul. Uxello- 'high' < *oupselo- 'higher', perhaps with the same l-suffix as in Gr. ὑψηλός < *up-s-ēl-? PIE $*b^heh_2go$- [m.] > Skt. bhága- [m.] 'prosperity, well-being, happiness', Av. baga-, baγa- [n.] 'share, (favourable) lot', OP baga- 'god'. The short vowel of IIr. $*b^haga$- is expained by Lubotsky's Law (Lubotsky MSS (1981)) from the loss of the laryngeal in front of a voiced stop plus another consonant; this condition would have been given, for instance, in athematic verb forms, and in bhakṣ-, Av. baxš-. ToB pāke, ToA pāk 'part, piece' might reflect a borrowing from Middle Iranian (Adams 1999: 363), and the Slavic cognates (e.g. OCS bogatъ, Ru. bogátyj 'rich', OCS bogъ, Ru. bog 'god') must also be loanwords from Iranian, since they do not show reflexes of Winter's Law. φαδάσαι [v.] · γνάψαι 'to card' (H.). ◄GR►
•ETYM Read φαδ<ι>άσαι, derived from φάδι = trāma, κρόκη, πηνίον 'woof, weft', whence the denominative verb φαδιάζειν; φάδι is the popular form of ὑφάδιον (see ►ὑφαίνω).

φαίδιμος [adj.] 'shining, noble', often as an epithet of Ἕκτωρ, Ἀχιλλεύς, and others (Il., epic poet.), also as a PN; metrically enlarged -ιμόεις (N 686). ◄IE $*g^{wh}(e)h_2id$- 'bright, clear'► •DER φαιδρός 'bright, clear, cheerful, joyous' (Pi., Sol., A., etc.; Φαίδρη λ 321); in compounds e.g. in φαιδρόνους 'with a joyous mind' (A.), φαιδρωπός 'with a bright look' (A., E.). Hence 1. φαιδρ-ότης [f.] 'brightness, cheerfulness' (inscr., Plu. etc.). 2. -όομαι 'to be cheerful' (X.). 3. -ύνω 'to make clear, clean, wash; to cheer up, refresh' (mostly poet. since Hes. Op. 753), rarely with ἐκ-, ἐπι-, ἀπο-; thence -υντής [m.], lit. 'purifier', of the statue of Zeus in Olympia (Paus., Poll.), but usually φαιδυντής, -ταί (El. and Att. inscr.; cf. below); fem. φαιδρύντρια (A. Ch. 759). Isolated is φαίδει· ὄψει (H.), probably from *φαῖδος [n.].
•ETYM We find a stem φαιδ- with various suffixes: φαιδ-ρός, φαίδ-ιμος, *φαῖδ-ος; for a similar system, compare e.g. κυδρός : κύδιμος : κῦδος, etc. Another derivative must have been *φαιδ-ύνω (compare αἰσχρός : αἶσχος : αἰσχύνω), which has left a trace in φαιδυντής, and may have been replaced in the transmission by φαιδρύνω. However, formations such as φαιδρύντρια and φαιδρόνους (for *φαιδί-νους) in A. testify to the productivity of the adjective φαιδρός. Cognate forms are Lith. gaidrùs 'bright, clear', gaidrà 'cloudless heaven, clear weather', also giẽdras, -rùs 'id.' < PIE $*g^{wh}eh_2id$-.

•VAR Dor. φαινόλα (Rhinth.); also φαίνουλα, παίνουλα, πένουλα (Edict. Diocl.).
•DER Diminutive φαινόλιον [n.] (pap. II^p). With metathesis φαιλόνης, φελ- (2 Ep. Ti. 4, 13), and the more usual φαιλόνιον (pap.), probably after the instrument nouns in -όνη, -όνιον; MoGr. φαιλόνι (φελ-).
•ETYM Formation like μαινόλης 'raving', σκωπτόλης 'mocker', etc. (Chantraine 1933: 237f.), but since it refers to an instrument, the semantics are deviant. An old feminine formation (like μαινόλις etc.) is found in φαινόλις, an epithet of ἠώς, αὔως (h. Cer., Sapph.), in the sense of 'bright, illuminating' clearly belonging to φαίνω. It is unclear why the cloak was referred to as "the illuminating / shining one". Borrowed as Lat. paenula.

As a second member, adapting to the s-stems, e.g. τηλεφανής 'far-seen, conspicuous' (poet. since ω 83); innumerable PNs, e.g. Ἀριστο-φάνης; very often from prefixed compounds, e.g. ἐμφανής 'visible, apparent, evident' (IA) (to ἐμφαίνω), whence -εια, -ία, -ίζω, -ισις, -ίσιμος, -ισμός, -ιστής, -ιστικός.
•DER 1. φαν-ερός 'visible, apparent, clear' (Pi., IA), whence -ερ-ότης (late), -όομαι (Hdt.), -όω (late), -ωσις. ἔμφα-σις [f.] 'appearance, reflection, clarification, emphasis' (Arist., Hell.+), -τικός 'emphatic' (Demetr. Eloc., etc.). b. φάνσις [f.] 'appearance' (very rare and late), ἀπόφαν-σις [f.] 'declaration, statement' (Arist., Hell.+; beside ἀπόφασις), whence -τικός (Arist. etc.), ἀνάφανσις [f.] 'appearance' (late), ἄμφαν-σις 'adoption' (Leg. Gort.), -τός 'adopted' (ibid.). 4. ἀμφαντύς [f.] 'id.' (Leg. Gort.). 5. φάσμα [n.] 'appearance, omen' (Ion. poet., Arist., etc.). 6. Verbal adj.: a. -φαντος, often in compounds: ἄφαντος 'invisible' (Il., epic poet., late prose), νυκτίφαντος 'appearing in the night' (A., E.); πρόφαντος 'announced, revealed' (Pi., Hdt., S. etc.), to προ-φαίνω; secondarily φαντός as a simplex 'visible' (Orph.). Also b. -φατος in ἀπαρέμφατος (to παρ-εμ-φαίνω), scil. ἔγκλισις, lit. "not showing anything alongside", as a grammatical term = Lat. modus infinitivus (D. H., etc.), opposed to παρεμφατικός, also ἀν-, κακ-έμφατος, etc. (late), also πρό-, ὑπέρ-φατος (Pi.).
7. -φάντης [m.] in univerbations, e.g. ἱεροφάν-της (ἱρο-) "who explains holy practices", 'senior priest' (IA), whence -τις, -τέω, -τία, -τικός. 8. -φα(ν)τικός to prefixed compounds, e.g. ἐμφα(ν)τικός 'expressive, demonstrative' (Hell.+). 9. φάντωρ [m.] 'one who displays' (Att. epigr. II[p]), ἐκφάν-τωρ, -τορία, -τορικός (late); also in univerbations, e.g. ἱερο-φάντωρ (Suid.), -φάντρια [f.] (Rom. inscr. IV[p]). 10. Denominative (to derivations in -τ-): φαντάζομαι [v.] 'to become visible, appear' (IA), occasionally with ἐκ-, ἐν-, κατα- etc., act. -άζω 'to make visible, present' (late), whence φάντασ-μα [n.] 'appearance' (trag., Pl., etc.), -μάτιον (Plu.), -μός 'id.' (Epicur.), -ις (ἐμ-) [f.] 'sight, appearance' (Pl., etc.), -ία [f.] 'sight, imagination, fantasy' (Pl., Arist., etc.), whence -ιώδης, -ιάζομαι, -ιόομαι, -ιόω, -ιαστικός; φαντασ-τός (Arist. et al.), -τικός (Pl., Arist., etc.) 'able to produce the appearance'. 11. Adverbs: -φαδόν in ἀμφαδόν 'publicly, openly' (Hom.), adj. -δός (τ 391, A. R.), -διος (ζ 288), adv. -δίην (Η 196, Thgn., et al.); -φανδόν in (ἐξ-)ἀναφανδόν 'id.' (Hom.); δια-, ἀμφάδην, Dor. -δᾶν 'id.' (Archil., Sol., Alcm.), ἐκφάνδην 'id.' (Philostr.); ἀναφανδά (Od., A. R.).
Hence, from the present stem, the jocular adverb φαινίνδα παίζειν 'to play ball' (Antiph. Com. etc.). On φανή [f.] 'torch', see on φανός (s.v. ►φάος).
•ETYM Derived from the PIE root *b^hh_2- 'to shine, appear, seem'. A primary verb is found in Skt. bhā́-ti 'to light, shine', noun bhānú-, Av. bānu- [m.] 'splendour'; a nominal n-suffix is also found in OIr. bán 'white', ToA pañi, ToB peñiyo [m.] 'splendour', and in Germanic: OE bōnian, LG bohnen 'to polish, scrub'.
Most of the Greek forms are formed on a verbal stem φαν-, whence φαίνω < p^han-i̯e/o-. Acc. to LIV, this goes back to a PIE nasal present *b^h-n-(e)h_2-, whence with thematization Proto-Greek *φανε/ο-. Cognate nasal presents are (continued in) Arm. banam 'to open, reveal', nasalless aor. bac'i, Alb. Gheg bâj, Tosk bënj 'to make, do' < ban-*. A verbal form without stem-final nasal is the hapax legomenon πεφήσεται; it is also found in zero grade φάσις, -φατος, -φατικός and φάσμα. Some of these may also have been formed analogically: for φάσμα, compare ὕφασμα to ὑφαίνω, for φάσις, -φατος, compare βάσις, -βατος to βαίνω; and πεφήσεται could have been supported by βήσεται to βαίνω. Alternatively, φάσις, -φατος reflect nasalless forms in *b^hh_2-, and πεφήσεται < PIE *b^heh_2-. The H.-glosses πέφη· ἐφάνη ἤ πεφύκασι and φάντα· λάμποντα are not very reliable. See ►φάος, ►φημί.

•DER φαιότης [f.] 'dark grey color', ὑποφαιόω (to ὑπόφαιος) [v.] 'to color grey' (late). The ethnonym Φαίακες, Φαίηκες has also been compared to this adjective (cf. Björck 1950: 260f.). Furthermore φαικός = λαμπρός (S. Fr. 1107, H.), φαικῶς· λαμπρῶς ... (H.), influenced in form and meaning by λευκός. Hence φαικ-άσιον [n.] (Hell.+), -άς [f.] (AP) designation of a white (?) shoe? Here also φαωτός (of χλαῖνα Delph. IV[a]), or to φάος?
•ETYM φαιός has been compared with Lith. gaĩsas 'beam of light, redness in the sky', and reconstructed as PIE g^{wh}aiso- or g^{wh}əiso- (compare φαιδρός : Lith. gaidrùs); neither is possible in the current reconstruction of PIE (at the most, $g^{wh}eh_2i$-so-). Other reconstructions which have been proposed are *φαιϝός and *φαισϝός. Lith. gaĩsas has also been derived from gaid-sas* (cf. gaidrùs), but apparently without any support. In short, the etymology of φαιός is unknown.

•ETYM Formation like φάραγξ, σῆραγξ, φάρυγξ etc. The prenasalized form proves Pre-Greek origin (not in Fur.!). The nasal and the consistent vocalization as -αλα- render the earlier comparison with Germanic 'beam' (ON bjalki [m.] < belkan-*, OHG balko [m.] < balkan-*) and Balto-Slavic words (Lith. balžíena(s) 'flexible crossbeam on a sledge, stick', Ru. •ETYM The uncertainty about the exact meaning renders etymologizing difficult. The word has been connected with φάλαγξ and with Lat. falx, flectō (see Frisk s.v.). The Latin noun might be related to Gr. ἐμφαλκωμένοις· περιπεπλεγμένοις (Suid.). Another unclear word is φάλκη· ὁ τῆς κόμης αὐχμός, ἢ νυκτερίς (H.). In the first meaning, perhaps related to πάλκος (see ► πηλός)? On the different names of the bat, see Schwentner KZ 71 (1954): 95f. The word may well be Pre-Greek.

φάλλαινα [f.] 'whale' (A. Fr. 464 M., Arist., Str., Nonn., etc.), of a monster (Ar. V. 35, 39, Lyc. 841); also 'moth' (Nic. Th. 760; Rhodian acc. to sch.). ◂PG(V)▸

Also φάλης, -ητος (-ῆς, -ῆτος) [m.] = φαλλός, also personified (Soph., S. Ichn., Ar., Theoc., H.); Ion. gen. φάλεω (Hippon. 14b).
•ETYM The meaning 'membrum virile' probably developed from another, more concrete meaning. In meaning, the word βαλλία 'private parts' (Herod.) is closest; some have connected the ethnonym Τριβαλλοί (= *Τριφαλλοί). Other look-alikes in form and meaning are MoHG (dial.) bille 'penis' and OIr. ball 'member, body-part', which have often been compared with various words (especially from Germanic) for 'ball, bullet, sack, drinking vessel, testis, bull', from a hypothetical PIE root *$b^hel$- 'blow (up), swell'. Because of its body shape, the whale ►φάλλαινα might also be cognate with φαλλός. The connection with 'pyralis, night-moth' remains unclear (Immisch Glotta 6 (1915): 194ff.; cf. also Güntert 1919: 219f.).
The forms with β (βαλλίον Herod. 6, 69) and the variation λ/λλ clearly point to Pre-Greek origin, see Fur.: 172.

Hence Φαλαρῖτις [f.] epithet of Athena (Call. Fr. 503). Also τετραφάληρος, epithet of κυνέη (beside ἀμφίφαλος; E 743 = Λ 41).
•ETYM As the form and function of the φάλοι and φάλαρα remain unknown, any attempt at an etymology remains hypothetic. Borrowed as Lat. phalerae. Fur.: 231 adduces βαλόν· οὐρανόν 'sky'; see also op.cit. 257[36] on the suffix -αρα. So the word may be of Pre-Greek origin, provided that the identification is correct.

Furthermore: 1. φαλιός 'bright, white-spotted' (Call., Hell. pap., Procop.), after πολιός; φαλιόπουν· λευκόπουν (H.). 2. φάληρος (Nic.), Dor. -ᾱρος (Theoc.), 'white-spotted', also as an animal name (Theoc.), denominative ptc. φαληριόωντα 'frothing up white' (κύματα N 799). Hence φαληρίς, -ᾱρίς [f.] 'Eurasian coot, Fulica atra' (Ar., Arist., etc.), also 'canary grass, Phalaris nodosa' (Dsc.), -ήριον [n.] 'id.' (Ps.-Dsc.). TN Φάληρον [n.] a harbour of Athens. 3. φαλακρός (also ἀνα-, ἡμι-, etc.) 'bald-headed, round and bald' (IA), -ότης [f.] (Hp., Arist.), -όομαι 'to become bald-headed', -όω 'to make bald' (Hdt., Arist., LXX), ἀπο- (Phryn. PS), -ωμα, -ωσις (LXX, Plu., etc.); -ιάω 'id.' (Suid. s.v. ἀωρόλειος); fem. φαλάκρα 'bare hill' (St. Byz.); TN Φαλάκρα(ι), -άκριον etc.; also Βάλαγρος, -άγραι. As Frisk 1934: 62-64 showed, -ακρο- is suffixal and has nothing to do with the word for 'top'. 4. φάλανθος 'baldheaded, bald' (AP, D. L., pap., etc.), also as a PN and TN; -αντίας [m.] 'bald head' (Luc.), -άντωμα [n.] 'bare spot' (v.l. LXX), often ἀναφάλαντος (-ανθος) 'id.' (pap., LXX), and -αντίας (-ανθίας), -αντιαῖος, -αντίασις, -άντωμα (Arist., LXX, Luc. etc.); probably after the verbal adjectives in -αντος (cf. e.g. ἀθέρμαντος = ἄθερμος, etc.), then sporadically adapted to ἄνθος. See also ►παμφαλάω and ►φαλίς.
•ETYM All Greek forms may be derived from the adj. φαλός, which was compared with Lith. bãlas 'white', as a plant-name 'snowdrop, etc.' (beside more usual báltas 'white'), and with Alb. balë 'horse with a white spot on its forehead'. A lengthened grade to this root is found in Latv. bâls 'pale', and OCS bělъ, Ru. bélyj 'white' < *$b^h\bar{e}lH$-o-.
Among numerous other formations, the Lat. and Germanic designations of the coot (= φαληρίς) has also been compared: Lat. fulica (probably < *$b^hol$-ik-), OHG belihha, MoHG Belche. It was further supposed that ►βαλιός was related as a word from the Balkans, with Βαλίος (name of a horse of Achilles), see Brandenstein Sprache 2 (1950-1952): 76 with further combinations.
However, the whole group, with interchanges φ/β, τ/θ, κ/γ, is clearly of Pre-Greek origin, see Fur.: 192.

φάος [n.] 'light, daylight', also metaphorically (Il., epic poet.). ⊲IE *$b^heh_2$- 'shine'⊳ •VAR φόως (epic), φῶς (Att.), also φάβος = φάϝος (Pamphyl.), gen. φάεος, Att. φάους and φωτός, nom.acc.pl. φάεα, φάη, φῶτα, etc.
•COMP φαεσφόρος (Call.), φαοσφόρος (Lyr. Adesp.), φωσφόρος (Att.) 'bringing light, bearing a torch'; φαυοφόροι· Αἰολεῖς. ἱέρειαι (H.). Frequent as a second member, e.g. λευκοφαής 'with white light, white-gleaming', παμφαής 'all-shining, wholly radiant' (trag.), αὐξιφαής 'increasing light' (Man., Cat. Cod. Astr.), Εὐρυφάεσσα [f.] mother of Helios (h. Hom. 31; analogical formation metri causa); furthermore φωτ(ο-) (Hell.+) in e.g. φωτοειδής 'luminous, full of light', φωταγωγός 'bringing light', fem. 'opening for light, window', whence -αγωγέω, -ία; αὐξίφωτος 'increasing light', whence -φωτέω, -ία.
•DER 1. From φάος: φαεινός < *φαϝεσ-νός (Il., epic poet.), φάεννος (Aeol.), PN Φαηνος (Dor.), Φαηνα (Arc.), φᾱνός (Att.) 'shining, bright, pure'; thence φανότης

[f.] 'brightness'; as a noun φᾰνός [m.] 'torch' (com., X., etc.), also φᾰνή [f.] (Hes. Fr. 47, E.), perhaps after φᾰνῆναι, -φᾰνής? Φᾰναῖος epithet of Zeus (E. Rh. 355 [lyr.]), of Apollo (Achae.). From φαεινός: φαείνω (ἀμφι-) [v.] 'to come to light, shine, glow' (Od., epic), also trans. 'to bring to light' (Nic.), pass. 'to appear' (Call., A. R.); aor. pass. φαάνθην (Il., μ 441), probably for *φαένθην after φάνθην (Chantraine 1942: 81; cf. Schwyzer: 723), whence φαάντατος 'most radiant' (ν 93), compar. φαάντερος (AP).
2. From φῶς: φωτ-εινός 'glowing, light, bright' (X., Hell.+), φωτ-ίζω [v.] 'to (en)lighten, brighten, reveal, instruct', also of baptism (Hell.+), also with δια-, ἐπι-, κατα- etc.; thence -ισμός (κατα-, ἐπι-, περι-) [m.], -ισις (δια-) [f.] 'enlightenment' (Hell.+), -ιστικός 'enlightening' (late), -ιστήριον [n.] 'baptistery' (Epigr. VI^p), plur. = luminaria (gloss.), -ισμα [n.] 'lunar phase' (comm. Arist.). On φωστήρ, φώσκω, see φαυστήρ, φαύσκω below.
Them. aor. φάε 'lighted up, appeared' (Ἠώς, ξ 502), subj. προφάῃσι (Max. 280), ptc. φάουσαι (or rather φαοῦσαι, Arat. 607 of the constellation Χηλαί), also φῶντα· λάμποντα (H.). Thence two presents: 1. With an enlargement -θ- only ptc. φαέθων 'shining, radiating', of the sun (Il., epic poet.), also as a PN Φαέθων (Od., etc.), and -οντίς, -οντιάς (AP, Opp.); as a first member φαεσίμβροτος 'bringing light to mortals', of Ἠώς, Ἠέλιος, etc. (epic poet. since Ω 785, κ 138), φαυσί- (Pi.), note φαέσασθαι· ἰδεῖν, μαθεῖν 'see learn' (H.). 2. With a suffix -σκ- and reduplication: πιφαύσκω [v.] (only pres. and ipf.) 'to reveal, show, announce' (Il., epic, lyr.); prefixed without reduplication: δια-, ἐπι-, ὑπο-φαύσκω, rarely aor. -φαῦσαι, fut. -φαύσω 'to shine, rise' of stars, 'to dawn' of daylight (Arist., Hell.+), also (after φῶς) -φώσκω (Hdt., late); simplex φώσκει· διαφαύει (H.).
To the primary verb belong several nouns: ἄ-φαυστος 'unilluminable, unannouncable' (Plot.), ἡμί- (Poll.); φαῦσις (διά-) [f.] 'enlightenment, illumination' (LXX, Plu.), ὑπό- '(narrow) opening, opening for light' (Hdt. 7, 36, LXX, Ph.); διάφαυμα [n.] 'dawn' (pap. VI^p); φαυστήρ [m.] 'lamp, torch' (Epid. III^a), whence φαυστήριος epithet of Dionysus (Lyc.); also φωστήρ [m.] 'light, radiance', plur. 'lights of heaven' = 'stars, sun and moon' (LXX, NT, Vett. Val. etc.) = θυρίς (H.). Several PNs: Φαύδαμος, Φώκριτος, Νικοφάης, Εὐρυφάων, Δημοφόων, Ἀντιφῶν, etc.
•ETYM All the above forms can be derived from a thematic aorist φαϝεῖν (Schwyzer: 747), which is seen only in the hapax legomena φάε, προφάῃσιν, φάουσα (*φαοῦσα), from PIE *b^hh_2-u-V-, and perhaps in φαύω (EM, etc.). The derived noun φάος yields φῶς with contraction (whence φόως by diectasis, Chantraine 1942: 81); thence the gen. φωτός after χρωτός, ἔρωτος, ἥπατος etc.; and the derivatives φωστήρ, φώσκω. It is superfluous to assume a special by-form φῶς < *b^hoh_2-s- (= Skt. bhā́s- [n.]; cf. below).
The PIE root is *b^heh_2- 'to shine' as seen in Skt. bhā́ti. The forms with -u- are not found outside Greek. A cognate with long vowel is generally seen in Skt. vi-bhā́va(n)- 'shining, lighhting', but this belongs to bhā́ti 'to lighten, shine' and thus allows for an analysis as vi-bhā́-va(n)-. A form without -u- is seen in πεφήσεται (see ►φαίνω).

φάραγξ, -αγγος [f.] 'gully, chasm, deep trench, abyss' (Alcm., trag., Th., X., etc.). ⊲PG(S)⊳ •VAR Also σφάραγγες (H. sine expl.); ἄσφαραγος (Il., Plu., Q. S.).
•DER φαραγγ-ώδης 'full of gullies' (Arist., D. S., etc.), - ίτης [m.] epithet of the wind Iapyx (Arist.), φαραγγαῖον· τῆς φαρέτρας τὸ κάλυμμα 'quiver-case' (H.), φαραγγόομαι in γῆ (ἄρουρα) πεφαραγγωμένη 'craggy field (caused by the Nile)' (Hell. pap.).
•ETYM Connection with a verb 'to cut, split, bore' (Frisk) is a chimaera. Like ►σῆραγξ, ►φάλαγξ, φάραγξ is of Pre-Greek origin (note the prenasalization). Fur.: 227 compares μάραγοι· οἱ ἀπόκρημνοι τόποι 'overhanging places' (H.) and Spanish (Pre-Roman) barranca (cf. Alessio REIE 2 (1939): 153).

φάραι · ὑφαίνειν, πλέκειν 'to weave, plait' (H.).

•DER Diminutive φαρέτρ-ιον [n.] (Mosch.), -εών, -εῶνος [m.] 'quiver' (Hdt.), after the local nouns in -(ε)ών; -ίτας [m.] 'archer'.
•ETYM Instrument noun and local noun in -τρᾱ, for which derivation from φέρω with a reduced grade has been assumed (cf. Schwyzer: 358), beside a full grade in φέρετρον; one compares βάραθρον : βέρεθρον, χαράδρα : χέραδος, etc. However, because a reduced grade is not accepted anymore since the laryngeal theory, a loanword should be considered, e.g. from Iranian, with folk-etymological adaptation (see Chantraine 1933: 333 and especially Hubschmid 1953a with more examples of loanwords for 'quiver').

φαρία unknown (pap. II^p).

•DER φαρκιδώδης 'wrinkly' (Hp. apud Erot.), -ιδούμενοι· στυγνάζοντες (H.), of a gloomy look, literally 'wrinkling'.
•ETYM Gr. φαρκίς has been compared with Lat. fricāre 'to rub off', Lith. brūkis 'stroke, line' and braũkti 'to strike, rub', but this is formally hardly possible; so Pre-

Greek? The connection with φορκόν is quite uncertain. In the meaning 'white, grey', φορκός may belong to a verb for 'gleam', to which e.g. Go. bairhts, MoE bright; this would presuppose a secondary shift from 'grey' to 'wrinkling' (ῥυσός).

φάρμακον [n.] 'healing or harmful medicine, healing or poisonous herb, drug, poisonous potion, magic (potion), dye, raw material for physical or chemical processing' (Il.). ◂PG(V)▸ •VAR φάρμακος (accent following Hdn. Gr. 1, 150) [m.] 'poisoner, enchanter' (LXX, Apoc.).
•DIAL Myc. pa-ma-ko.
•COMP φαρμακοπώλης [m.] 'medicine seller, pharmacist' (Att.), πολυφάρμακος 'having many φ., skilled in many φ.' (Hom., Sol., A. R., Thphr.).
•DER A. 1. φαρμάκ-ιον [n.] 'healing or harmful medicine' (Pl., Hell. pap., Plu. etc.). 2. φαρμακ-ία, Ion. -ίη [f.] 'remedy' (Hp., LXX etc.). 3. φαρμακ-εύς [m.] 'who prepares φ., poisoner, enchanter' (S., Pl. etc.), probably backformed from -εύω. 4. φαρμακ-ίτης [m.], -ῖτις [f.] 'containing φ., concerning φ.' (Hp., Eup., etc.). 5. φαρμακ-ίων [m.] epithet of a physician (Gal.). 6. φαρμακ-ίς (Ar., D., Arist. etc.), -εια (Arist.), -εύτρια (Theoc. in tit., Eust.), -ισσαι [pl.] (H., see βαμβακεύτριαι) [f.] 'enchantress'. 7. φαρμακ-ών, -ῶνος [m.] 'dye works' (S. Fr. 1109).
B. Adjectives 1. φαρμακ-ώδης 'medicinal, poisonous, rich in φ.' (Arist., Hell.+). 2. φαρμακ-όεις 'id.' (Hell. and late poetry). 3. φαρμακ-ηρός 'treated with φ., imbued, impregnated' (pap. IIP). 4. -ικός 'concerning the φ.' (Tz.; usually -ευτικός for euphonic reasons).
C. Denominative verbs: 1. φαρμακ-εύω 'to prepare or use φ., to heal, poison, enchant' (IA), also with κατα-, δια-; hence -ευτής = -εύς (late), -ευτικός 'concerning the use of φ., belonging to φ.' (Pl., Gal. etc.), -εία [f.] 'preparation or use of φ., healing, poisoning, enchantment' (Hp., Att., Hell.+), -ευσις [f.] 'id.' (Hp., Pl.), -εύτρια (see A 6); also as a back-formation -εύς (see A 3). 2. φαρμακ-άω 'to feel the effect of a φ., to long for φ.' (D., Thphr., Plu. etc.). 3. φαρμακ-όομαι 'to be poisoned, enchanted' (Plu., pap.), aor. act. -ῶσαι 'to provide with φ.' (Pi.). 4. φαρμάσσω, Att. -ττω 'to treat with φ., to heal, poison, enchant' (ι 393), rarely with κατα-, ἐν-, ἐπι-; hence φάρμαξις [f.] 'medical treatment, enchantment, metalworking' (Pl., Plu., etc.), -ακτήρ, -άκτης [m.] = φαρμακεύς (Opp.), -ακτήριος 'healing' (Lyc.). Also back-formation φαρμᾰκός [m.] 'lustration, scapegoat', also as a term of abuse (Hippon., Ar., Lys., D., Call.); perhaps, the long α was introduced after pejorative words in -ᾱξ (the length is certain in Hippon. and Call., but shortvowel in Ar. Eq. 1045, both are possible in Ar. Ra. 733).
•ETYM The original meaning of φάρμακον cannot be established with certainty. The word is clearly Pre-Greek. Fur.: 220 compares φόρβαντα· ἰατρικὰ φάρμακα (H.), φόρβια· φάρμακα, οἱ δὲ φόρβα (H.). Note the variations α/ο and μ/β, well-known from Pre-Greek. Foreign origin is already pleaded for by Chantraine 1933: 384 and Schwyzer: 497.

φάρος [n.] 'plough?' (Alcm., Antim. Eleg.; both very doubtful), 'ploughing' (H., EM), also = φάρυγξ (Lyc.)? ◂?▸

•DER φαροῦν· ἀροτριᾶν; φαρῶσαι· ἀρόσαι ... (H.); 3pl. φαρόωσι 'to plough' (Call. Fr. 183 = EM 788, 24), perhaps after ἀρόωσι? ἄφαρος, ἀφάρωτος = ἀνήροτος, ἀναροτρίαστος? (Call. Fr. 183, 82 c = 555 Pf.; very uncertain, cf. Pf. ad loc.), βούφαρον (-ην cod., -ῆ Latte)· τὴν εὐάροτ[ρ]ον γῆν. φάρος γὰρ ἡ ἄροσις (H.). Further aor. φάρσαι = σχίσαι (EM). Compare ▸φάραγξ.
•ETYM The relation between the words cited is unknown, because of their meagre attestation. The present φαρόωσι seems an intensive deverbative (*φαράω); imitation of ἀρόωσι is quite improbable. The sequence φαρ- could be interpreted as the original zero grade of a verbal stem PIE *b^herH- 'to pierce, bore', continued e.g. in OHG borōn 'to bore', bora [f.] 'borer', Alb. birë, brimë [f.] 'hole'; with o-grade Lat. forāre 'to bore (through)'; with e-grade MIr. bern(a) [f.] 'cleft, split', Arm. beran 'mouth'; with ē- or ō-grade Arm. brem 'to dig up, bore up', < birem* < PIE b^hēr-, or burem < PIE *b^hōr-. Words for 'to beat, hew', such as Lat. ferīre, ON berja, OCS borjǫ, brati 'to fight' have been kept separate by E-M for their deviating meaning.

•ETYM An Ionic word according to Solmsen 1909: 6f. Connection with φάρος 'plough' makes little sense. Previously, it was assumed that the -σ- was suffixal, and ἄψος, μύσος etc. were compared (Schwyzer: 513). Fur.: 254 suggests a Pre-Greek word, because of the suffix -σος.
The most promising etymology, however, is a connection with Hitt. parši-$^{a(ri)}$, parš-$^{a(ri)}$ 'to break', parša- 'morsel, fragment', if we assume that in a zero grade *b^hrs-o-, the -s- was preserved between vocalic resonant and vowel. The Hitt. word is compared with the Gm. group of ON bresta, OHG brestan, OE berstan 'to burst'. Within Greek, we find a verbal form φάρσαι = σχίσαι (EM).

φάρυγξ [f.m.] 'throat, gorge, larynx, windpipe' (Od.), also 'throat disease' (Hp.). ◂PG(S)▸

•ETYM Frisk interprets this as an inherited Indo-European word for 'throat, gorge', identical with Lat. frūmen 'id.' < frŭgsmen*, Arm. erbuc, gen. -oy (o-stem) 'chest, breast-piece of sacrificial animals'; it would be further connected with ▸φάρος. Yet, this analysis is completely wrong: the prenasalized suffix -υ(γ)γ- shows that the word is of Pre-Greek origin.

•ETYM Formation like δρέπανον, κόπανον and other instrument names. The traditional connection with σφάζω, σφαγή through *σφαγ-σκ-ανον (Prellwitz) is unconvincing phonetically and morphologically. The connection with Skt. khaḍgá- 'sword' (Specht KZ 66 (1939): 220) is refuted by Mayrhofer KEWA s.v.
The word is no doubt Pre-Greek (cf. the a-vocalism, suffix -αν-). Fur.: 300 takes up the traditional connection with σφαγ- (s.v. σφάζω) and interprets it in Pre-Greek terms. Isebaert Glotta 63 (1985): 150f. connects Skt. bhájate, but he does not explain the Greek -α-, nor the meaning.

•ETYM Identical with Lat. phasēlus [m., f.] 'kind of beans, husk-like bread' (Cat., Cic., Aug. poetry, Colum., etc.), which probably was a loanword from Greek. The inverse direction was assumed by Pisani Rend. Acc. Linc. 6:6 (1930): 184ff.: φάσηλος would be an Italic loanword into Greek, cognate with φακός 'lentil'. Because of Alb. bathë 'tick-bean' (see ▸φακός), Kretschmer Glotta 21 (1933): 181f. considered Illyrian intervenience. Further details are found in WH s.v., where Mediterranean origin is assumed. From the Lat. diminutive phaseolus (Colum., etc.), Greek took φασίολος, -ίωλος, πασίολος (Gal., Poll., Edict. Diocl.). Fur. 175 follows Alessio in comparing Lat. basēlus 'light vessel', which would point to substrate origin, either Mediterranean or Pre-Greek.

•ETYM As φάσσα may have been reshaped after νῆσσα, κίσσα etc., we cannot draw any conclusions from the opposition φάσσα : φάψ for the origin of -σσ- and -β-. For φάψ, compare monosyllables such as γύψ, σκώψ, γλαῦξ etc. The hypothesis by Hamp 2005: 102-5, seems too complicated. The word is probably Pre-Greek.

φάτνη [f.] 'crib, manger' (Il.), 'depression, coffer in a coffered ceiling, coffer' (Hell. inscr.), 'tooth socket' (Poll.), name of a star in the constellation Cancer, beside the Ὄνοι (Thphr.). ◄PG► •VAR Late also πάθνη.
•DER 1. Diminutive φατνίον [n.] 'tooth socket, gums' (late medic., Ph.), name of a star = φάτνη (Hephaest.). 2. Verbs: a. φατν-εύω [v.] 'to feed at the manger' (late), -ίζομαι (ἐκ-) 'to be fed at the manger' (Hld., Nic. Dam.), -άζομαι 'id.' (Aq.); b. φατν-όω [v.] 'to deepen a ceiling, furnish with panelwork; to coffer' (LXX), -ωμα [n.] 'coffering, coffered ceiling, coffer, embrasure on a ship' (A. Fr. 78 = 114 M., Plb. etc.), 'tooth socket' (Gal.), -ωματικός 'panelled' (Plu., Anatol. inscr.), -ωτός 'id.' (H., Phot.), -ωσις [f.] 'coffering' (LXX). 3. as a hypostasis from *ἐκ φάτνης: ἐκφατν-ίζομαι 'to be cast out (of the manger)' (Posidon., Eust.), -ισμα [n.] 'litter, scrap' (Philostr. VA, etc.). 4. Φάτνιος, epithet of Zeus in Phrygia (Laodicea Combusta; imperial period).
•ETYM The byform πάθνη, attested by Moeris 212, 9 as Hellenistic, lives on in MoGr. and could come from Ionic (Schwyzer: 121; Wackernagel 1916: 23 with ref.). It is widely assumed (Frisk, DELG) that πάθνη is the oldest form, whence by shift of aspiration φάτνη. Inverted writing yielded another variant πάθμη (LXX; Schwyzer: 216). Yet, Beekes 2003: 109-112 stresses that φάτνη is the oldest form (Hom.), whereas πάθνη is only Hellenistic. There are parallels for a progressive shift of aspiration (φιδάκνη > πιθάκνη).
Frisk follows the traditional etymology of φάτνη as a derivative *$b^h n̥d^h$-n-h_2- to PIE *$b^h end^h$- 'to bind' as in Skt. badhnā́ti, perf. babándha, Go. bindan. The same n-suffix is recognized in some Celtic forms with full grade: Gaul.-Lat. benna 'two-wheeled chariot with a plaited basket', W benn 'carriage', and, as a loanword, MoHG dial. benne 'waggon box'.
It has been assumed, on the basis of the Celtic word, that φάτνη originally denoted a 'wicker basket'. However, the crib to which horses were tied is a solid construction (ἐυξέστη) and cannot have been of wicker-work. As φάτνη cannot be derived from *$b^h end^h$-, the word is most probably Pre-Greek.

φαττάγης [m.] 'scaly ant-eater' (Ael.). ◄PG(V)► •VAR Also σπατάγγης (Sophr.), πατάγγης (Poll.).
•ETYM The variants show that the word is Pre-Greek (Fur.: 164, 281).

φαύζειν ⇒φαῦσιγξ.

φαῦλος [adj.] 'bad, unfit, ill, mean, poor, etc.' (IA). ◄PG► •COMP φαυλόβιος 'leading a bad life' (sch.), ὑπόφαυλος 'somewhat bad, etc.' (Hp.).
•DER φαύλιος (of fruits) 'coarse, etc.' (Thphr. etc.). φαυλ-ότης [f.] 'bad character, etc.' (Att.), -ίζω [v.] 'to regard as bad, despise' (Pl., X., LXX, late), also with δια-, ἐκ-, etc., whence -ισμός (ἐκ-) [m.] (LXX, J.), -ισμα [n.] 'contempt', -ίστρια [f.] 'despiser' (LXX).

•ETYM Pejorative adjective with a suffix -λο- and barytone accent, like μάχλος, στύφλος, etc. May have been dissimilated from *φλαῦλος; compare the synonym φλαῦρος. The form is also reminiscent of ►ἀφαυρός 'weak, powerless', and is no doubt a Pre-Greek word.

φαῦσιγξ [f.] 'blister from burns, blister' (Ar. Fr. 883, Hp. apud Gal. 19, 150, Poll. 7, 110, EM 789, 52, H.). ◄PG(S,V)► •VAR Also φαῦστιγξ, plur. -ιγγες.
•COMP No compounds or derivatives.
•ETYM Formation like μῆνιγξ, στρόφιγξ, etc. that has been compared with φαύζει· φρύγει 'roasts, dries' (H.). The prenasalized suffix and the variation σ/στ show that the word is Pre-Greek; note the intervocalic -σ-.

φάψ ⇒φάσσα.

φέβομαι [v.] 'to flee, take flight' (Hom., A. R.). ◄IE *$b^h eg^w$- 'run away, flee'► •VAR Only pres. and ipf.
•DER Causative-iterative φοβέω 'to put to flight, frighten', -έομαι 'to flee, take flight, be put to flight' (Hom.), also 'to frighten' and 'to be frightened' (post-Hom.), also with ἐκ-, κατα-, ὑπερ-, προ-, etc.; later, the verb was interpreted as a denominative. Hence φόβ-ημα (ἐκ-) [n.] 'fear' (S. [lyr.], sch.), ἐκ-φόβ-ησις [f.] 'fright' (Hdn., Sch., H.), φοβ-ητικός (ἐκ-, προ-) 'fearful, daunting' (Arist. etc.), -ητρον (ἐκ-) [n.] 'terror, scarecrow, terrible event' (Hp., LXX, Ev. Luc., AP). As a first member in Φοβεσιστράτη, epithet of Athena (Ar. Eq. 1177), on the model of ἑλκεσι-, ἀλφεσι-, ταμεσι- etc.), also Φοβέστρατος 'id.' (Hes. Th. apud Chrysipp. Stoic., EM 797, 54; after Ἀρχε- etc.). Verbal noun φόβος [m.] 'flight' (Il., epic poet.), 'fright' (post-Hom.), probably also Λ 544 etc.; often as a second member, e.g. περί-, ἔκ-, ἔμ-, ὑπέρφοβος, partly back-formations from ἐκφοβέω, -έομαι, etc. Hence φοβερός 'dreadful, fearful' (IA), φοβερ-ότης [f.] 'terribleness', -ίζω 'to terrify', -ισμός [m.] (LXX). φόβος 'fright' replaced the noun δέος (to δείδω). On ►φόβη, see s.v.
•ETYM Beside thematic φέβομαι with *e , we find Balto-Slavic cognates with -ē- from Winter's Law: Lith. bė̃gti, 1sg. bė̃gu 'to walk, run' , Latv. bêgt, 1sg. bêgu 'to walk', bêgtiês 'to flee' (bēga 'flight', bêglis 'fugitive'), OCS běžati, 1sg. běžǫ 'φεύγειν', Ru. bežátь, 1sg. begú 'to walk, flee'. Van Windekens 1941: 96 suggested connecting ToA pkänt 'apart', pukäl 'year', ToB pikul 'year'; considered conceivable by Adams 1999 s.v. pikul.

•COMP E.g. χρυσοφεγγής 'with golden radiance, gold-radiant' (A. Ag. 288); φεγγοβολέω 'to cast light' (Man.).
•DER φεγγίτης [m.] name of a stone = σεληνίτης (Plin., etc.); βραχυφεγγίτης = βραχυφεγγής (λύχνος) 'casting a sparse light' (AP 6, 251; metrically enlarged). As a back-formation: φέγγω [v.] 'to glow, shine, enlighten' (Ar. Ra. 344 [lyr.], A. R., late), only pres. and ipf., also with περι-, occasionally κατα-, ἀνα-.
•ETYM No etymology. Has often been connected with Lith. spingiù (spìngu), spingė́ti 'to give a weak light, glitter' and with OE spincan 'to spark', OHG funko, MoHG

•VAR Indeclinable.
•ETYM After ► πεῖ, s.v.

φείδομαι [v.] 'to spare, save, refrain from' (Il.). ◄IE? b^heid- 'split' (?)► •VAR Sigm. aor. φείσασθαι (Ω 236, etc.), redupl. them. aor. πεφιδέσθαι, opt. -οίμην (Υ 464, Φ 101, ι 277); on the differentiation in meaning against φείσασθαι, see Chantraine 1942: 415; fut. φείσομαι (Att.), πεφιδήσεται (Ο 215, Ω 158 = 187), φεισθήσομαι (pap. IIᵖ), perf. med. ptc. πεφεισμένος (Luc., D. C.), πεφιδημένος (Nonn.), ipv. πεφίδησο (late epigr.).
•COMP Rarely with ὑπο-, περι- (X., A. R. etc.). As a first member in the univerbation φειδαλφιτ-ῆσαι (aor.) 'to handle the barley thriftily' (Com. Adesp.), -ως (Phryn. PS). Numerous PNs, e.g. Φείδιππος with Φειδιππίδης, Λεωφείδης, Φειδ-ύλος, -ίας, -ων, etc., a king in Argos (Hdt.), whence -ώνειος, -ωνίδης.
•DER φειδ-ώ [f.] (Hom., Hes., Democr., Th., LXX etc.), -ωλή [f.] (X 244, Sol.) 'saving, thrift, sparing', -ωλός 'thrifty' (Hes. Op. 720), whence -ωλία [f.] (Ar., Pl. etc.), φειδώς · parsimonia (gloss.). Backformed adjective φειδός 'thrifty' (Com. Adesp., Democr., Call. Fr. 460), whence φείδων, -ωνος [m.] 'oil-can with a narrow neck' (Poll.), frequent as a PN (see below).
•ETYM Gr. φείδομαι must be inherited, and agrees phonetically PIE b^heid- 'to split, etc.', as attested in Go. beitan, E bite, Skt. bhinádmi, Lat. findō 'to split', root aorist Skt. ábhedam, ábhet. A convinding semantic motivation has not been found: originally 'to cut off niggling, nip off' or 'to cut away from sth. = to withdraw'?

φελγύνει [v.] · ἀσυνετεῖ, ληρεῖ 'is stupid, talks nonsense' (H.). ◄?► •ETYM Has often been connected with Skt. phalgú- 'futile, weak, useless, etc.', Lith. spil̃gti 'to languish from lack of light, die off (of plants), get a bad appearance (of men)' and others, but this comparison is doubtful in all respects.

φελλεύς [m.] 'uneven, stony ground', also the name of a mountainous region in Attica (Cratin., Ar., Pl. etc.). ◄?►
•DER Φελλείτης [m.] 'inhabitant of the Φ.' (St. Byz.). Also φελλία [n.pl.] (X. Cyn. 5, 18), φελλίς (γῆ, Poll. 1, 227), φελλεών, -ῶνος [m.] (Arr. *Cyn.*17) 'id.'; Φελλεῖς [f.] region in Attica (IVᵃ).
•ETYM The word has been connected with πέλλα· λίθος 'stone' (H.) in different ways; Fur.: 161 suggests that it shows Pre-Greek interchange π/φ; uncertain. Alternative: to φελλός, referring to the uneven, porous structure of corc?

φελλός [m.] 'cork, cork-oak' (Pi. P. 2, 80, A. Ch. 506, Thphr., Hero, pap. IIIᵖ). ◄?►
•COMP φελλόδρυς [f.] 'cork-oak' (Thphr.), perhaps from Arcadian (cf. Ruijgh 1957: 90).
•DER φέλλ-ινος 'made of cork' (Luc.), -ώδης 'id.' (Poll.), φελλίνας· κοῦφος, ἀπὸ τοῦ φελλοῦ; φελλεῦον· ἐπιπλέον (H.); probably also φελλ-ῖναι [pl.] name of a fast water bird (Dionys. Av.), φελλίνιοι· ὀροβάκχαι (H.). Also Φελλώ [f.] the land of the Φελλόποδες (Luc. VH 2, 4).

•ETYM One may compare ► φολίς and a Slavic word of comparable meaning, e.g. Ru. boloná 'outgrowth on trees', bólonъ 'sap-wood, weak bark'. If correct, than φελλός could derive from *φελ-νός - but given the limited distribution of the words, this is highly improbable. Fur.: 164 compares ἀκρό-σπελλος and σιτό-σπελλος, on which I have no opinion.

φέλλουρα [f.] 'giant fennel, Ferula communis' (sch. Hes. Op. 52a). See André 1958: 60. ◄LW Lat.► •ETYM As DELG remarks, probably metathesized from *φέρουλα vel sim., which itself must be a borrowing from Lat. ferula, the Greek word for fennel being νάρθηξ. Given the productivity of the suffix -ουρ- in plant names, folk etymology has certainly been at work.

φένᾱξ, -ᾱκος [m.] 'impostor, trickster' (Ar., rare and late). ◄PG►

φέριστος [adj.] almost only in voc. φέριστε as a courteous address (Il., epic poet.). ◄IE bʰer-ist(H)o-*►

•ETYM Identical with Av. bairišta [voc.] 'helping best', so probably inherited from PIE. Superlative of the PIE root bʰer-* 'to carry, etc.' attested in Gr. φέρω, etc. The original meaning is disputed: 'most serviceable, most helpful, useful'?, 'strongest in carrying'? The co-occurring variants φέρτερος 'stronger, braver, better' and φέρτατος 'strongest, bravest, best' (Il., epic poet.) are innovations after ὑπέρ-τερος, -τατος; compare also φίλ-τερος, -τατος etc. Differently on φέριστος, etc. Seiler 1950: 94ff. On the meaning, see also DELG s.v. φέρτερος.

C. With lengthened grade: ► φώρ (not ► φωριαμός). See further ► φαρέτρα, ► φερνή, ► ἀμφορεύς, ► δίφρος; ► φορμός (unrelated is ► φάρμακον).
•ETYM A PIE present *b^h*er-(e/o)*- 'to bear, etc.'; cognate forms are e.g. Lat. ferō 'id.', Go. bairan also 'to give birth', Arm. berem, Skt. bhárati, OCS berǫ 'to collect', Ru. berú 'to take'. Beside the thematic forms, Greek has a unique form without a thematic vowel, the ipv. pl. φέρτε (verse-initial in I 172), which agrees exactly with Lat. ferte and also with fer, fertis, fers, fert, as well as with Skt. 3sg. bhárti (RV, bis). These may well be old athematic forms.
PIE *b^h*er-* was originally limited to the present stem (fut. οἴσω, aor. ἐνεγκεῖν, ἐνεῖκαι, also τλῆναι, ταλάσσαι, Lat. perf. tulī). Non-presentic forms are found in Greek only occasionally: the late aor. ἤφερα (IG 3, 1379 = MoGr., after ἤνεγκα), the isolated gloss ἔφερσεν· ἐκύησεν (H.), the incidental poetic formations φερτός, ἄφερτος, συμφερτός with a remarkable full grade (as against the zero grade in Skt. bhr̥tá-).
Cognate forms of the nominal derivatives (often independent innovations): φόρος = Skt. bhára- [m.] 'taking away, profit, booty' (bhārá- [m.] 'burden, load'), OCS sъ-borъ [m.] 'congregation', Ru. sbor 'collecting'; -φόρος = Arm. -vor, e.g. lus-a-vor 'bringing light' (from loys 'light'; cf. Lat. Lūci-fer), Skt. -bhará-, e.g. vājam-bhará- 'bringing the prize of a contest'; φέρμα formally = Skt. bhárman- [n.] 'maintenance, nurture, care', to which OCS brěmę, Ru. berémja 'load, burden' with acute intonation (cf. Mayrhofer EWAia 2: 247, 249); φέρ(ε)τρον is formally comparable to OE beorðor [n.] 'birth'. However, the existence of a root variant *b^h*erh₁-* (for φέρετρον, Skt. bharīman-, Ru. berémja) seems doubtful.

φεύγω [v.] 'to flee, escape, be on the run, go into exile; to be prosecuted' (Il.). ◄IE *b^h*eug-* 'flee'► •VAR Also pres. φυγγάνω (IA); aor. φυγεῖν, fut. φεύξομαι (Il.), φευξοῦμαι (Att.), ἐκ-φεύξω (pap. II[a] etc.), perf.ptc.med. πεφυγμένος (Hom. etc.), act. πεφευγότες (α 12), πεφυζότες (Il.), sg. -ώς (Nic.), after φύζα; ind. πέφευγα (IA), opt. πεφεύγοι (Φ 609), ἐκπεφευγοίην (S. OT 840).
•COMP Frequently with prefix, e.g. ἀπο-, δια-, ἐκ-, κατα-. Nominal: e.g. φυγο-πτόλεμος 'who shuns battle' (ξ 213, Q. S.); rarely φυξ(ι)-, e.g. φυξ-ανορία or -ἄνορα [acc.] 'fleeing from men' (A. Supp. 8 [anap.]), also φεύγυδρος 'shunning water' (late medic.), φευξίκτερος, a plant name (Ps.-Dsc.).
•DER Root noun φυγ- in φύγα-δε (Il.), -ά-δις (Theognost. Can., EM) 'to flight', φύγ-δα (A. Eu. 256 [lyr.]), -δην (Nic. Th 21) 'on the run'.
Hence: 1. with suffix -ι̯α-: φύζα [f.] '(wild) flight, panic' (Il., ξ 269 = ρ 439), -ακινός 'fugitive, shy' (N 102), as if from *φύζαξ; -αλέος 'id.' (AP), φυζηλός· δειλός, φυγάς (H.); also isolated verbal forms: aor.ptc. φυζηθέντες (Nic. Th. 825), to *φυζάομαι; inf. φυζάναι· φυγεῖν, δειλιάσαι (H.), for -ᾶναι, or an artificial athem. formation? Cf. πεφυζότες above.

2. With suffix -ᾱ-: φυγή [f.] 'flight, exile' (Od.); frequently from prefixed verbs, e.g. ἀνα-, ἀπο-, δια-, κατα-. 3. Adjectives πρό-, πρόσ-φυξ 'fleeing, searching for cover' (late), πρόσφυγος 'id.' (Aesop.), ἀφυγής 'who cannot flee' (Timo); καταφύγιον [n.] 'refuge' (Democr.), προσ-, συμφύγιον 'id.' (late). 4. From φυγ- or φυγή: φυγάς, -άδος [m., f.] 'refugee' (IA), whence -αδεύω [v.] (Att.), -αδείω (El.) 'to expel, banish'; -αδεῖον [n.] 'place of exile' (LXX), -αδεία [f.] 'banishment' (Plb., Vett. Val.), -αδευτικός 'banishing' (Hld.); φύγιμον [n.] 'place of refuge' (Andania I[a]).
From φυγεῖν and φεύγειν: 5. φύξις [f.] 'flight, rescue' (K 311 = 398, 447, Nic.), younger φεῦξις [f.] 'id.' (S. Ant. 362 [lyr.]); from the prefixed verbs: ἀνά-, ἀπό-, διά-, κατά-φυξις, -φευξις (Ar., Th., Pl., etc.), often mixed up in the transmission; hence φύξιμος (Hell.+ also φεύξιμος, Delph. [III[a]] φύκτιμος) 'granting refuge, rescue' (ε 359, Plb., Plu.), 'capable of fleeing' (S. Ant. 788 [lyr.]), 'escapable, avoidable' (Hp., Max.), κατα-(Plu.). From φύξις also: φύξιος 'belonging to the flight' (A. R.), as epithet of Zeus, also of Apollo, 'granting refuge' (Apollod., Lyc., Paus., inscr. etc.); -ηλις 'fugitive, faint-hearted' (P 143, Nic., Lyc.), formation unclear. 6. Verbal adjective φυκτός 'avoidable, escapable' (Hom.), only with negation = ἄφυκτος (Pi., Simon., Att.); younger φευκτός 'id.' (S. Aj. 224 [lyr.]), with negation = ἄφευκτος (late); φευκταῖοι· ἀποτρόπαιοι (H.), φευκτ-ικός 'fit or prone for escaping' (X., Arist., Str.), also with ἀνα-, ἀπο-, δια-, ἐκ-; φευκτ-ιάω [v.] 'to want to escape' (Arist. Fr. 130). 7. Desiderative φευξείω (E. HF 628; cod. -ιῶ).
•ETYM Gr. φεύγω is built on a PIE aor. continued in φυγεῖν, cf. LIV² s.v. 1. *b^h*eu̯g-*. The nasal pres. φυγγάνω was built on the aorist on the model of τυχεῖν : τυγχάνω. The Greek and Lat. nouns often agree with each other, e.g. φυγή = fuga. Cognate forms are Lat. fugiō, perf. fūgī 'to flee', Lith. bū́gstu, bū́gti 'to be frightened' (with long vowel from Winter's Law), baugùs 'fearful, afraid'. Less certain (because alternatively derived to *b^h*eug-* 'to be useful') is the appurtenance of YAv. būjaiiamna- 'setting himself free', YAv. būjat̰ 'sets free'.

•VAR φεψάλυξ, -υγος (Archil., Ar., Plb.).
•DER φεψαλόομαι in ἐφεψαλώθη 'he was covered in sparks of fire' (A. Pr. 364).
•ETYM Unclear. Usually interpretated as a reduplicated form to ► ψόλος, but since -αλο- is a suffix, the words can at best be remotely cognate (cf. ► ψάμμος, ► ψῆν). φέψαλος rather seems Pre-Greek.

φή [conj.] 'like, as' (B 144, Ξ 499 acc. to Zenodotus, h. Herm., Call.). ◄IE *b^h*e/o-*► •VAR Also φῆ.
•ETYM Not certainly explained. Probably cognate with Av. bā 'indeed', bōit̰ 'even', Lith. bà 'really', OCS and Ru. bo 'for', Go. -ba- 'even', etc. < PIE *b^h*e/o-*. Gr. φή could reflect PIE *b^h*eh₂* [n.pl.] (cf. Frisk), *b^h*eh₁* [ins.sg.] (cf. DELG) or a lengthened grade *b^h*ē* (cf. De Vaan 2009: 53). Differently Fraenkel Gnomon 28 (1956): 238 (with semantic parallels from Slavic) and Ruijgh Lingua 58 (1982): 205 (on the oxytone accent): φή as a suffixless ipv. of φημί 'say'.

φηγός [f.] 'oak, Quercus Aegilops' (Il.). ◄IE *b^h*eh₂ǵ-* 'beech'► •VAR Dor. (Theoc.) φαγός.

•DER φήγινος (E 838, Call., Dsc.), with extended suffix -ίνεος (AP, Orph.) 'of the oak, oaken' (borrowed as Lat. fāginus, -ineus), PN Φηγεύς (E 11 etc).
•ETYM Inherited word, identical with Lat. fāgus [f.] 'beech', Gaulish bāgos* 'beech' (in French place names), and with Gm. forms, e.g. ON bók, OHG buohha [f.] 'beech', Go. boka [f.] 'letter'. The absence of the beech in Greece proper caused the change of meaning of φηγός to 'oak'. The name of the beech tree played an important role in the discussion on the 'Urheimat' of the Indo-Europeans. An important question was whether Eastern tree-names, like Kurd. būz 'kind of elm', Ru. boz 'elder' and corresponding Slavic words had to be derived from *$b^heh_2\acute{g}$-, too. This was dismissed by Eilers and Mayrhofer 1962: 61ff.

φήληξ, -ηκος [m.] 'wild fig' (S. Fr. 781[?], Ar. Pax 1165). ◂PG(S)▸ •COMP φηληκόθρεπτον· ὑπὸ ὀλύνθου (cod. ὄλονθον) τῆς συκῆς τεθραμμένον (H.).
•ETYM An evident Pre-Greek word in -ηξ (cf. Fur.: 245[70]). It might have been folk-etymologically adapted to ► φηλός, cf. Chantraine 1933: 381, Nehring Glotta 14 (1925): 181.

•VAR Accent following Hdn. Gr. 1, 155, 20.
•COMP βροτόφηλος· ἀνθρώπους φηλῶν, τουτέστιν ἀπατῶν (H.).
•DER Denominative φηλόω [v.] 'to deceive' (few attestations in A., E., A. R., etc.), whence φήλωμα [n.] (Antipho Soph.), -ωσις [f.] (EM) 'deception'. φηλήτης (accent following EM 794, 1) [m.] 'deceiver' (Hes. Op. 375 (?), h. Merc., trag. etc.), often written as φιλ-, and at a very early date; hence -ητεύω 'to deceive' (h. Merc.), -ησίαις· κλεπτοσύναις (H.), -ατία [f.], -ατίας [nom.sg.m.] = -ήτης? (Delphi III[a]). For the origin of the spelling φιλ-, cf. Bechtel 1921(3): 336, Luther 1935: 167f.
•ETYM Has been connected with Lat. fallō 'deceive', and with ► ἀποφώλιος. On φαλός = μωρός, ἐμμανής with φαλίπτει, φαλωθείς see ► φαλός· λευκός. DELG thinks that the writing φιλ- is not original, but to my mind, the argumentation is wrong. The word may well be Pre-Greek.

φημί [v.] 'to say, explain, argue', perfective (Il.), as against imperfective λέγω, ἀγορεύω etc. 'to speak, talk'. Hence, the old ipf. ἔφην got aoristic function. Pres. med. ἐφάμην, ἔφατο, etc. ◂IE *b^heh_2- 'say'▸

Aeol. φάμα [f.] 'quotation, enunciation, rumour, reputation, speech' (Od.); as a second member e.g. in εὔφημος, -φαμος 'bringing a good message, containing no evil omen = mute, boding well' (Il.; PN B 846), whence -έω, -ία, -ίζομαι, -ισμός; πολύφημος, -φαμος 'speaking much, much spoken of, famous' (Il.; PN A 264, Od. [PN], Pi., Parm. etc.), whence -ία. From φήμη is derived the PN Φήμιος [m.] name of a singer (Od.), epithet of Zeus (Erythrae III[a]), -ία epithet of Athena (ibd.). Denominative φημίζω [v.] 'to announce, spread by rumour' (Hes.), also with ἐπι-, δια-, κατα- etc.; hence ἐπιφήμισμα [n.] 'acclamation of ill or good omen' (Th., J.), -ισμός [m.] 'benediction' (Str.). From H.: ἀφήμονες· ἄρρητοι, οὐκ ὀνομαζόμενοι; ἀφημοῦντας· ἀγροίκους; ἀφημίστους· ἀγροικίας (read -κους?); ἀφαμιῶται· οἰκέται ἀγροῖκοι, περίοικοι (Cret.). 2. φῆμις, -ιος [f.] 'speech, talk' (epic poet. since K 207), probably a contamination of φήμη and φάτις. 3. φήματα· ῥήματα, φάσματα (H.). 4. φημοσύνη [f.] 'oracle?' (Crete II-I[a]). 5. -φήτης [m.] in ὑποφήτης 'interpreter, expositor' (P 235, Hell. epic), -φῆτις [f.] (AP etc.), -φᾶτις (Pi.), -φητεύω, -εία (late); προφήτης (IA), Dor. Boeot. -φάτας (Pi., B., Corinn.) 'announcer, seer, prophet', -φῆτις [f.] (E., Pl., LXX, etc.), -φητεύω, -εία, also -φητίζω (Hp.), -φητάζω (Man.), -φητικός (late); PN Εὐ-, Περιφήτης (Il.). 6. -φήτωρ = -φήτης in ὑπο-, προφήτωρ (Hell. and late poetry), συμφήτωρ· μάντις, μαρτυς (H.).
B. With zero grade: 1. φάτις [f.] 'quotation, rumour, enunciation' (epic poet. since Od., Hdt.), φατίζω (κατα-) [v.] 'to state, confirm, betroth' (epic poet. since Parm., Hdt., et al.). 2. φάσις 'id.' (Hdt., Pl., Arist., etc.), often to the prefixed verbs ἀντί-, ἀπό-, ἔκ-, κατά-, whence (ἀντι-, ἀπο-)φατικός (Arist. etc.); φάτης· ψεύστης (H.). 3. φατός, as a simplex only in opposition to ἄφατος 'unmentioned, unknown' (Hes. Op. 3) and with negation = ἄφατος 'ineffable, unspeakable' (Hes. Sc. 230, Parm., Pi., etc.); as a second member (in original univerbations), e.g. παλαί-φατος 'spoken of long ago, ancient' (Od., epic poet.). 4. φατειός, only with οὐ: 'unutterable' (Hes., verse-final); probably metrical (or στίχος μείουρος) for -τέος, if not = Skt. -tavyà-.
•ETYM PIE root present *b^heh_2- / *b^hh_2- 'to say'. Cognate verbs are Arm. bam 'say' < *b^heh_2-mi, bay <*b^heh_2-ti 'says' introducing direct speech (see Schwyzer KZ 57 (1930): 242ff. on Lesb. φαι 'you say'), Latin med. fātur (cf. φάτο), Ru. bájati, 1sg. báju 'to talk, speak', possibly OE bō(i)an 'to brag'. A derived nasal present may be Skt. bhánati 'speak, sound'. Gr. φάτις corresponds to Arm. bay 'word, speeh', and φήμη to Lat. fāma 'rumour, fame'. Gr. ἄφατος corresponds to Latin infitiās īre 'to deny' from in-fato-* 'not said'; fato-* is also the basis for fateor 'to admit'. Furher nominal derivations are Lat. fās, fātum, fābula, fācundus; Armenian ban, gen. ban-i, instr. ban-iw 'word, speech, matter' with a suffix *-ni-, ON bǿn, OE bēn 'request, prayer' < PIE *b^he/oh_2-ni- (cf. φωνή).
The PIE root *b^heh_2- 'speak' may be identical in origin with *b^heh_2- 'to shine' in Skt. bhā́-ti 'to light, shine', see ► φαίνω. They are formally the same, and the semantic derivation is common: 'say' < 'explain, make clear', etc., cf. Lat. dēclārō, arguō, etc. See ► φωνή.

•DER Φηνεύς [m.] (Apollod.), Φηνώ [f.] (Paus.).
•ETYM Without convincing etymology. The variant φίνις may point to a Pre-Greek word, which is most probable anyway. Osthoff 1901: 246 compared Skt. bhāsa- [m.] bird a prey, in which case Greek would continue *b^h*ēs-nā* or *b^h*ās-nā*. Risch 1937: 98 supposes an original color designation, perhaps "bright", like περκνός, κελαινός etc.; cf. the bird names ► μόρφνος and ► κύκνος.

φήρ, -ρός [m.] 'wild beast, predator', also of Centaurs (A 268, B 743) and satyrs (Telest., Gal.).
•DER Φηρεύς [m.] a satyr (Nonn.); also φήρεα (-εῖα?) [n.pl.] 'swollen tonsils', because of the similarity with budding satyr-horns (Hp.); adv. φηρεατικῶς (Gal.).
•ETYM Aeolic for ►θήρ.

φῆρον [n.] = βρῶμα θεῶν (Hdn. Gr. 1, 385) 'food of the gods'; φῆρος· ἡ τῶν ἀρχαίων θεῶν τροφή (H.). ◁?▷

•COMP Also with prefix, e.g. προ-, ὑπο-, παρα-.
•DER προφθασία [f.] (or -ια [n.]?) "the anticipation", name of a festival in Clazomenae (D. S. 15, 18), παραφθαδόν [adv.] 'in anticipation' (Opp.), ptc. καταφθατουμένη = κατάφθατον ποιουμένη 'to take in possession beforehand' (γῆν A. Eu. 398), φθατήσῃ· φθάσῃ (H.), cf. Schwyzer: 705.
•ETYM Without any doubt an inherited word. Connected with Skt. dhag-nu-, by Hoffmann apud Eichner MSS 31 (1973): 67, 94[53]; the laryngeal was reconstructed by K.T. Schmidt 1988: 475f.
The root aorist ἔφθην follows the model of ἔστην, ἔβην, ἔπτην, ἔφην etc., with a zero grade φθάμενος. The 3pl. ἔφθασαν for ἔφθαν (φθάν Λ 51) gave rise to the sigmatic aorist ἔφθασα; to these aorists were joined the futures φθήσομαι (from full grade *$d^hg^{wh}eh_2$-) and φθάσω, and subsequently the perfects ἔφθακα, πέφθακα. The present φθάνω < *φθά-νϝ-ω probably continues *$d^hg^{wh}$-n̥u̯-V-, with the suffix -neu-/-nu-* replacing $-neh_2$-/-nh_2-* (LIV[2]: 135[11]).
On the glosses ψατᾶσθαι· προκαταλαμβάνειν 'to anticipate'; ψατῆσαι· προειπεῖν 'to warn'; ψαέναι· φθάσαι (H.), which have ψ-instead of φθ-, see Schwyzer: 32.

•VAR Aor. φθέγξασθαι, fut. φθέγξομαι (Il.), perf. ἔφθεγμαι, 2sg. ἔφθεγξαι, etc. (Pl., Arist. etc.).
•COMP Very often with prefix, e.g. προσ-, ἀπο-, ἐπι-, ὑπο-.
•DER 1. φθέγμα (πρόσ-, ἀπό-, etc.) [n.] 'sound, voice, cry, quotation' (Pi., Att.), -ματικός (ἀπο-, ἐπι-) 'sounding, etc.' (Hell.+). 2. φθέγξις (ἀνά-, ἐπί-, πρό-) [f.] 'utterance, talk' (Hp., late). 3. φθεγκ-τός 'effable' (Plu.), often and earlier in compounds, e.g. ἄφθεγκτος 'ineffable, unpronounced, soundless' (B., A., etc.); -τικός 'sounding' (Max. Tyr.); προσ-φθεγκτήριος 'adressing, greeting' (Poll.). 4. φθόγγος [m.] (Il.), also φθογγή [f.] (Il., epic poet.) 'sound, voice'; in compounds λιγύφθογγος 'clear-voiced' (Il., epic poet.), σύμ-φθογγος 'with one voice' (A.), ἀντί-φθογγος 'resounding' (Pi.), to συμ-φθέγγομαι, etc.; hence φθογγ-άριον [n.] 'sound-pipe', -άζομαι = φθέγγομαι (Pi. etc.).
•ETYM Could be a stem φθεγ- with regular ablaut and with nasalization (as in κλαγγή, κλάγξαι etc.), but it has no certain etymology. None of the existing connections with semantically comparable words (e.g. with OCS zvęgǫ 'ᾄδειν', Ru. zvjágatь, 1sg. zvjagú 'to bark, yap', Lith. žvéngti, 1sg. žvéngiu 'to neigh', or with Lith. speñgti, of the ears, 'to resound, bite, hum, drone' (cf. •ETYM The word was already derived from φθείρω, φθεῖραι by Galen, i.e. as a back-formation with retained -ει-. Doubt about this is voiced by Schwyzer: 326 and Chantraine 1933: 3, the latter of whom considers folk-etymological adaptation of the original word to φθείρω. DELG mentions the fact that the Greeks thought that lice grew from rotten flesh, and then defends the connection with φθείρω, which is doubtful.

•ETYM Greek φθείρω < *$d^hg^{wh}er$-i̯e/o- corresponds to an intransitive present in Indo-Iranian: Skt. kṣárati, Av. γžaraiti 'to flow, stream', Skt. also 'to flow away, diverge, disappear'. An PIE s-aorist (ἔφθειρα < ἐφθερ-σ-) is retained in 3sg. ákṣār (RV) < a-kṣār-ṣ-t*; the other verbal formations of Greek and IIr. (e.g. caus. Skt. kṣārayati = Av. γžāraiieiti 'to let flow', ptc. kṣarita, etc.) are innovations. The morphological identity of φθόρος and Skt. kṣara- [n.] 'water' (Lex.) is due to independent development, as is the comparison between ἄφθορος 'unspoiled, pure' (late) and akṣára- 'not flowing away, imperishable' (RV). •DER 1. From the present: φθινάς, -άδος 'declining, decaying, consumption', as a fem. subst. 'consumption' (Hp., S., E., etc.); φθίνυλλα [f.] taunting address of an elderly woman (A. Eq. 935; after the PN); cf. φθῖσα· ἡ λεπτὴ ἀπὸ φθίσεως (H.); φθινάσματα (ἡλίου) [n.pl.] 'setting (of the sun)', poet. formation (A. Pers. 232). 2. From the verbal stem: φθίσις [f.] 'declining, waning, consumption' (Pi., IA), -ικός 'consumptive' (Arist., Epid. IV^a, Hell.+), -ικεύομαι (Androm. apud Gal.), -ιάω (Hp., Arist.) 'to be consumptive'; φθιτοί [pl.], rarely -ός [sg.], 'the deceased' (trag., late prose), ἄφθιτος 'imperishable' (Il., epic poet.). 3. With o-grade: φθό-η [f.] 'consumption' (Att., also Hp.; Ion. Hell. use φθίσις instead), -ώδης 'consumptive' (Paus.). On ►φθόϊς, -ῖς, see s.v. Also Φθίη [f.] (Il., etc.) land of the Φθίες (St. Byz.), perhaps originally 'land of the dead' (= φθίμενοι), a mythical place?

•ETYM PIE had a verbal root *$d^hg^{wh}ei$-, whence (acc. to LIV^2 s.v.) a nasal present *d^hg^{wh}-n(é)-i-, which was remade into *$d^hg^{wh}i$-n(é)u- in Greek (whence φθινύ-θω and *φθίνϝ-ω > φθίνω, with Ion. ῑ, Att. ῐ), and into *$d^hg^{wh}i$-n(é)H- in Indo-Iranian (whence Skt. kṣīṇati, Av. jināiti 'to destroy'). PIE also had an athem. aor. *d^hg^{wh}(é)i- > Gr. φθίτο, φθίμενος, etc. García Ramón MSS 51 (1990): 7-20, following Ruijgh, explains the Mycenaean form as meaning 'dead', an act. ptc. nom.pl. in -uos-, with medial-intransitive meaning, and perfect reduplication e-*; the form was later replaced by °φθίμενος. In Greek, the original diphthong ει in the s-aorist and s-future was replaced by ῑ at an early date, at least in writing and perhaps also in reality, first after φθίνω (with ῑ). In Attic, shortening was introduced in φθίσαι, φθίσω after the short vowel in φθίνω and on the model of σχίσαι and denominatives in -ίσαι (-ίζω). Gr. φθίσις = Skt. kṣíti- [f.] 'languishing, destruction', probably also Lat. sitis [f.] 'thirst' < *'disappearing, languish(ing)'. As a formula, Gr. κλέος ἄφθιτον (Hom.) = Skt. śrávaḥ ... ákṣitam (RV beside ákṣiti śrávaḥ). The initial *d^h- is retained in OAv. dǝ̄jit̰.arǝta- /djit-arta-/ 'destroying Arta-'. See also ►ψίνομαι.

φθόϊς, -ιος [f.] 'kind of cake' (Erythrae IV^a, Cos IV-III^a, Ar. etc.), 'pastille used for fumigation' (Hp.), 'bar of metal' (Att. inscr.), perhaps 'kind of cup' (Eup. 373 acc. to Ath. 11, 502b; very uncertain). ◂?▸

•VAR Also φθοΐς, -ΐδος.

•DER Diminutive φθοΐσκος (Hp.).

•ETYM The strongly deviating meanings provide a problem that is still unsolved; we can only speculate about the etymology. Formally, one might connect φθόη 'consumption' (to φθίνω 'to decline, consume'); the meaning 'decline' might be recognized in the explanations by H. s.v. φθόϊς (except for 'πλακοῦς'): τὰ πρὸς λεπτὸν ἀληλεσμένα καὶ τὸ ἀπορρέον ψῆγμα τοῦ χρυσίου. See DELG, where the possibility of a loan is kept open.

•ETYM Probably to be analyzed as φθόν-ο-, to a root *φθεν- (to which φθονέω is a causative or iterative?). De Vaan (p.c.) tentatively suggests connection with φθάνω 'to anticipate, be ahead of', which could imply that it is related to Av. ayžō.nuuamnǝm < a-gžanu̯amna-* 'which cannot be missed' (De Vaan 203: 441f.).

•ETYM A loanword of unknown origin, formally fitting the instrument names in -αλη, -αλο- (σκυτάλη, γύαλον, -η). Etymologies to be rejected: *πι-σαλᾱ from πι- = ἐπι- and ἑλεῖν 'grasp'; also πι-ϝhαλᾱ < pi-su̯alā to εἵλη 'heat of the sun' < PIE su̯el-* 'to burn'. Cf. also ►ὑπερφίαλος. The word is probably Pre-Greek on account of the interchange of suffixes that is already attested in Mycenaean (Fur.: 346).

•VAR φιαρύνει· λαμπρύνει (H.).
•ETYM No etymology, but reminiscent of πιαρός and φαιδρός. It has been assumed to be a contamination of those two adjectives, but this is unwarranted and therefore better rejected. Fur.: 165 compares πιαλός· παράλευκος and assumes Pre-Greek origin.

φιβάλεως [f.] 'a fig suitable for curing', also metaphorically of thin people (com.); acc. to sch. Ar. Ach. 802, a place in Megaris or Attica. ◄PG► •VAR Plur. nom. -εῳ, acc. -εως.
•ETYM Without any doubt a Pre-Greek word (not in Fur.). Formation like κορώνεως [f.] 'tree with raven-black figs', μελίνεως· εἶδος ἀμπέλου 'kind of vine' (H.), κανθάρεως [m.] a vine. As the basis of the TN, the sch. gives φίβαλις = γένος συκῆς 'kind of fig', with the plur. φιβάλεις = οἱ ἰσχνοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων; in EM 793, 26 (acc. to Apolloph.) φιβάλεα = τὰ σῦκα, -λέαι = ἰσχάδες.

•VAR Late πιθάκνη (Thasos V^a, Moer., Phot.); Dor. πισάκνα (H.).
•ETYM Since φιδάκνη is the old form, the word has nothing to do with πίθος. Frisk assumed (s.v. πίθος) that the word had the diminutive suffix -ιχνη, which became -ακνη, but this is impossible. The group of suffixes -ακ-ν- is typical for Pre-Greek. For the shift of aspiration, compare φάτνη. See Fur.: 197, 393.

•COMP As a first member e.g. φιλόφρων 'well-disposed, friendly-minded' (Pi., IA), φιλομμειδής 'with a friendly smile' (epic Γ 324+); early on in epic tradition, it was reinterpreted as a verbal element, e.g. φιλόξεινος (or -ξενος) 'to whom the guest is dear' > 'loving the guest, hospitable' (since Od.); in univerbations, e.g. φιλοθύτης [m.] (to φιλεῖ θύειν) 'loving the sacrifice, friend of the sacrifice' (Ar. etc.). As a second member, e.g. πολύφιλος 'with many friends' (Pi., Lys., Arist.), often considered verbal, with transition to the s-stems, e.g. θεοφιλής 'loved by the gods, dear to the gods' (IA); προσφιλής 'friendly, beloved, affectionate' (IA).
•DER 1. φιλότης, -ητος [f.] 'friendship, hospitality, love' (Il., epic poet.), -οτήσιος, Dor. -οτάσιος 'belonging to φιλότης' (epic poet. since λ 246); also -οττάριον address to a girl (Ar. Ec. 891), perhaps the hypocoristic gemination after νηττάριον? 2. φιλία, Ion. -ίη [f.] 'friendship, affection, love' (Thgn., Emp., IA); independent of φίλιος. Adjectives: 3. φίλ-ιος 'friendly' (Pi., IA), -(ι)ωτικός (Theol. Ar.). 4. -ικός 'id.' (Pl., X., Arist., etc.). 5. -ιακός 'id.' (Plot.), -ιακόν [n.] name of an association (inscr. Corycos). Verbs: 6. φιλέω (Il.) 'to be a friend, treat friendly or affectionately, to love, entertain, care', post-Hom. also 'to kiss' (especially with κατα-), with inf. 'to like to do, use to do', sometimes with prefix, especially κατα-. Forms: Aeol. φίλ-ημμι (Sapph.), -ήμεναι (Χ 265), aor. -ῆσαι (Il.), erroneous -ᾶσαι (Theoc.), pass. -ήθην (Β 668 [3pl. -ηθεν], Att.), med.ipv. φῖλαι, (ἐ)φίλατο, φίλωνται etc. (epic since Il.), fut. -ήσω, -ήσομαι (Od.), perf. πεφίλημαι, -ηκα (Pi., etc.).
7. From φιλία (φίλιος): φιλιάζω [v.] 'to become friends' (LXX, Hell. pap. etc.), whence -ιαστής (H.); -ιόομαι, -ιόω 'to make friends' (late), -ίωσις (sch.), -ιωτής = διαλλακτής (Suid.); -ιαίνομαι 'id.' (late). From φιλέω: φιλήτωρ [f.] 'lover' (A. Ag. 1446), 'loving, with love' (Nonn.); -ητής [m.] 'lover' (AP), -ητικός 'inclined to love or kiss ' (Arist., etc.), -ημα (Hyperdorism -ᾶμα Mosch.) [n.] 'kiss' (A. Fr. 135 = 228 M., E., X., etc.), -ημάτιον PN (Luc.), ἀντιφίλησις [f.] 'returning love' (Arist.), φιλημοσύνη [f.] 'friendliness' (Thgn.), to φιλήμων (EM, further only PN).
Also φίλτρον [n.] 'love potion' (poet. since Pi., also late prose), -τρὶς λίθος 'love-bringing stone' (Dam.); φίλητρα [n.pl.] (AP 11, 218; text and meaning uncertain); φεῖλος (for -ῑ-) [n.] = φιλία (epigr. Caria, ca. I^p). Numerous PNs, among others with *φιλτο-, e.g. Φιλτό-ξενος, Φιλτ-άδης. Literature: Landfester 1966. Kakridis 1963.
•ETYM For the epic aorist forms (ἐ-)φίλατο, etc., analogical origin to φιλέω is well possible (cf. δοκέω beside ἔδοξα); there is no need to assume a present *φίλλω. The element φιλτο-, which occurs only in PNs, may have arisen analogically to φιλο-: Φιλτό-ξενος to Φιλό-ξενος like e.g. Φαντ-αγόρας beside Φαν-αγόρας, Φαντ-ίας beside Φαν-ίας. φίλτρον seems to have joined the numerous instrument nouns in -τρον; the causative meaning 'stimulating love' is clear.

The original meaning of φίλος was 'own, accompanying' rather than 'beloved'. The etymology is unknown; the connection with a Celto-Germanic adjective for 'fitting, good, etc.' (Ir. bil, W Bil- in PNs, OHG bil-līh, etc.) must be abandoned. Lyd. bilis 'his, her' looks formally similar, but must be explained within Anatolian (from the pronoun bi- 'he'). Some have argued that φίλος represents an l-derivative of reflexive σφι, Lac. φιν (see Landfester op. cit.: 34ff. with a review of all earlier etymologies); in that case, the original meaning would be 'one's own'.

•ETYM The variation φλεδ-/φληδ- (in φληδῶντα· ληροῦντα H.) has been interpreted as ablaut, and the word thus connected with φλέω, by Frisk (assuming a suffix -δον-). However, we find -α- in ►παφλάζω and παφλάσματα 'stilted words', and φλην- in ►φληναφάω 'to babble'. The variation φλεδ-/φλην- shows nasalization (i.e. replacement of a consonant by the nasal of its series), which points to Pre-Greek origin; see already Kuiper 1956: 216.
The inner-Greek variation renders the connection with the proposed non-Greek evidence doubtful: e.g. φληδῶντα to OE blǣtan, OHG blāzan 'to bleat' (suggested by Holthausen KZ 47 (1916): 310). The connections with ToB plāc, ToA plāc 'speech, talk, word' < IE $b^hlōd$-en- (Van Windekens, criticized in Adams 1999 s.v. plāc) and that with OCS blęsti, 1sg. blędǫ 'to err, brag' is from b^hlend^h- (see Derksen 2008 s.v. blęsti) are formally doubtful anyway.

•VAR We find φλευ- only before consonant: in ἐπ-έφλευσε τὴν χεῖρα (IG 4, 955 [Epidauros II^p]). Non-presentic forms: perf. ptc. pass. ἐκ τειχέων περιπεφλευσμένων πυρί 'from the walls encompassed by fire' (Hdt. 5, 77); cf. with the same metaphor ἀσβέστη κέχυτο φλόξ (Π 123) and Lat. flamma circumfusus, divino circumfuso igni. Further aor. ἐπι-, περι-φλεῦσαι: φλὸξ ἀναδραμοῦσα ἐπέφλευσε τὴν χεῖρα (Epid. II^p), γαλῆ κατοικίδιος περιφλευσθεῖσα (Dsc.), in both places of encompassing flames and singeing fire; to this belongs περιφλευσμός (Aq. De.).
•DER περι-φλευσμός 'burn' (Aq.).
•ETYM DELG suggests that περιφλύω 'to burn superficially' (Ar. Nu. 396) stands for *-φλεύω, but I see no reason for this. In the antevocalic forms, *$b^hleu̯$- lost its -u̯-, giving ►φλέω. As DELG also remarks, the comparison of fire with a liquid is frequent in Greek.

φλέψ, -εβός [f.] 'vein' (N 546), also metaphorically 'metal-vein, spring (of water)' (X., Arist., Plb. etc.), 'vein of a plant' (Hp., Thphr.). ◂PG?▸
•COMP φλεβοτομέω (to φλέβα τέμνω) 'to bleed', -τομία, Ion. -ίη [f.] 'bloodletting' (Hp., etc.), -τόμησις, -τομική (late medic.), -τόμον [n.] 'device for bloodletting' (late medic., Luc.); ἐπίφλεβος 'having the veins on top, with prominent veins' (Hp., Arist.), also μελανόφλεβες [pl.] 'with black veins' (Aret.).
•DER φλέβ-ιον [n.] 'small blood-vessel' (Hp., Pl. Ti., Arist., Str.), -ώδης 'full of veins, like veins' (Hp., Arist., Thphr., etc.), -ικός 'belonging to the veins' (Arist.), -άζοντες· βρύοντες (EM, Phot.).
•ETYM As the IE designations of the veins vary strongly, and φλέψ stands isolated, it could well be a Greek innovation. In former dictionaries, connected with a large group of words in φλ- (φλαδεῖν, φλέω, φλύω, φλύκταινα, etc.). It has been supposed to be an enlargement in -g^w- of b^hel-* 'to blow, swell' (see ▸φαλλός), but such an "enlargement" would not solve anything. Thus, it seems obvious to assume a Pre-Greek loan, although I see no concrete formal indications.

•VAR Only gen.abs. φλεόντων δωμάτων ὑπέρφευ (A. Ag. 377 [lyr.]), μήλων φλεόντων (ibd. 1416); φλέοντας· φιλοῦντας (leg. φλύοντας?) ἢ φλυαροῦντας (H.).
•DER Epithet of Dionysus, with various forms: Φλεύς (Chios acc. to EM), Φλέως (inscr. Ephesus), Φλεών (Ael.), Φλοῖος (Plu.) and Φλοιά [f.] epithet of Kore (Lac. apud H.), Φλοιώ [f.] name of a Bacchante (Nonn.). PN Φλέας, -αντος [m.] (Priene II^a). On the appellatives φλοιός, φλόος, φλοῦς, see ▸φλοιός, and ▸φλέως. See also ▸φλύαξ, ▸φλυαρέω, ▸φλύκταινα. On δια-φλύξιες, see ▸φλύω.
•ETYM The series φλέω, φλεῦσαι, πέφλευσμαι agrees with πλέω, πλεῦσαι, πέπλευσμαι. Beside φλέ(ϝ)ω, we find a zero grade in φλύω (perhaps, ἔφλυον was originally an aorist, cf. ἔκλυον). On the semantic relation between φλέω and φλεῦσαι, see ▸φλευ-C-; it is unnecessary to posit a separate verb *φλεύω 'to burn'.
The closest comparandum to φλέω is Lat. fluō 'to flow, stream', of which the non-presentic forms like fluxī, fluctus may well be analogical (therefore, the velar in φλύξαι, etc. need not be old). This points to a reconstruction b^hleuH-* (LIV² s.v. 1. b^hleu̯H-*). Connection with Lith. bliáuti 'to roar', OCS bljьvati 'to vomit' is semantically uncompelling. Alternatively, if φλέω, φλύω belong together with βλύω, ▸βλύζω, this could suggest that all these words are Pre-Greek.

•ETYM Under ▸φλεδών, I have argued that the variation φλεδ-/φλην- is a typical case of Pre-Greek nasalization. Without -αφ-, we find φληνύω 'to brag' (Hp. apud Gal.), φλανύσσει· φλυαρεῖ, ληρεῖ 'talks nonsense' (H.), ἐκφλῆναι 'to bubble up' (E. fr. 470); cf. also φληδῶντα· ληροῦντα (H.), φλῆφος (leg. φλῆνος or φλήναφος?)· φλύαρος (H.), φλεδών; also φλύω and φλυαρέω. See also on ▸ἀφλοισμός [m.] 'foam, slobber' (with copulative ἀ-, or from ἀφρός).
•ETYM Part of the above verb forms is primary: φλιδάνει, ἔφλιδεν, πέφλοιδεν with the noun φλιδόνες, and part is clearly secondary: φλιδ-άω, φλοιδούμενος (from -έομαι or -όομαι), and φλοιδ-ιάω (also φλιδ-). LIV^2 reconstructs a PIE root ?*b^{h}lei̯d-, but there are no certain correspondences outside Greek; alternatively, these words may well be Pre-Greek. Formally, MoE bloat might be connected, if from PGm. blaitōn*.

A form περιφλίοντος without dental in Nic. Al. 62 is given by the best tradition (v.l. περιφλιδόωντος); it was probably influenced by περιφλύω. There are more aspects in which these two groups are close: beside φλιδάω, we have with a similar meaning φλυδάω and φλυδαρός 'weak, with meshes' (Hp.), perhaps already in Myc. pu$_2$-ru-da-ro? Formally, it belongs to ►φλύω (see also ►φλέω), but semantically it is closer to φλιδάω. A nasalized derivative of φλυδάω is ἐκφλυνδάνω 'to burst open' (of ulcers) (Hp.). Phonetically, φλυδάω can be compared with ON blautr 'wet, weak'. DELG assumes a separate verb φλῖω, which LIV^2: 88 does not follow. Cf. also ►φλοῖσβος.

Furthermore, ►φλέως (-εώς) [m.] 'reed, rush'. On the PN Φλόϝαξ, see ►φλύαξ.
•ETYM Formally, φλόος and φλοιός < *φλόϝ-ος, *φλοϝ-ιός belong to φλέ(ϝ)ω, like the epithet of Dionysus Φλοῖος, etc.; thus φλέως, -εώς after κορώνεως, ἐρινεώς etc. Semantically, the connection with φλέω is clear in ὑπέρφλοια (μῆλα) 'super-juicy', of apples (verse-final in Emp. 80), perhaps instead of -φλοα, and similarly in φλοίειν (φλοιεῖν?) = ἄγαν ἀκμάζειν (Antim.), if not for ►φλύειν. In the sense of 'rush', φλέως and φλοῦς refer to the luxuriant growth of the plant (cf. βρύον to βρύω); Frisk thinks that the rind (φλοιός, φλόος) may have received its name from its being rich in flesh and juice, as opposed to the wood underneath. Φοῖνιξ 5, -ῖκος 'Phoenician'. ⇒Φοίνικες.

φοινός [adj.] 'red' (of blood, αἵματι Π 159), epithet of θυμός in unclear meaning, 'blood-red? murderous?' (h. Ap. 362), 'deadly' (Nic.), of αἷμα (Mosch.) probably referring to the color (σ 97, A., S.), of a cobra, ἀσπίς (Nic.); of καρπὸς σίδης (Nic.); often with strengthening ►δα-: δαφοινός 'dark, tawny', especially of beasts of prey, also 'murderous, bringing death'? (Il., epic poet.); enlarged -εός (Σ 538, Hes. Sc. 159), -ήεις (Nonn.). ⊲?⊳ •DER More usual φοίνιος 'bloody, blood-stained, murderous, deadly' (Pi., trag.). fem. φοινάς = ἐρυσίβη (Theognost. Can.); enlarged -ήεις of δράκων (M 202, 220), -ώδης 'bright red'.
•ETYM Without convincing etymology. Connected with ►φόνος 'murder' already in antiquity, but this is unconvincing semantically and morphologically (suffix -i̯o-). The word was associated with φόνος early on, so that it came to be interpreted as a variant of it. Perhaps, the EN Φοίνῑκες is related to φοινός; similarly, Φαίακες to ►φαιός. Traditionally, it was assumed that 'purple' got its name from the Φοίνικες, as the "Phoenician color"; yet, various scholars have claimed the reverse, viz. that φοῖνιξ 'purple, red color' was primary, whence Φοινίκη 'the red (land), the land of purple'. Others have assumed that Φοίνικες was an (oriental) loanword. If one does not want to separate φοῖνιξ and Φοίνικες from φοινός, the only remaining possibility is to interpret poetic φοινός (with δαφοινός and φοίνιος) as a back-formation, which is difficult, but not impossible.

•ETYM The formally obvious connection with φέρω as "bearer" seems difficult to combine with the varying meanings, which are all connected with the notion of 'twining'. Schulze 1892: 110ff. therefore connected φάραι· ὑφαίνειν, πλέκειν 'to weave, plait' (H.) and ► φᾶρος 'cloth, linen'. Still, a development from 'basket' < 'bearer' to 'twined basket', with subsequent transition to other twined materials, is conceivable. Go. barms 'κόλπος' agrees phonetically with φορμός, but is also interpreted differently. Not related to ► φωριαμός.

•ETYM As a common basis of the attested forms, φρακ- beside φαρκ- can be posited (the late attestations φραγῆναι and φράγνυμι are analogical). It is unclear which of the two is older, or even if they both derive from a zero grade. Since their distribution is unclear, we may envisage the possibility that they are due to substrate origin. This is confirmed by the fact that there is no convincing correspondence outside Greek. The traditional connection with Lat. farciō 'to stuff, cram, fatten' and frequēns 'crowded, frequent' is quite uncertain. On φύρκος· τεῖχος 'wall' (H.) see ►πύργος.

•ETYM PIE word for 'brother'. Cognate forms: Skt. bhrā́tar-, Lat. frāter, Go. broþar, OCS brat(r)ъ, etc. In Greek, it was replaced in its original meaning by ἀδελφ(ε)ός. In the context of the extended family, 'brother' was probably also used for 'half-brother' and for other male cognates of the same generation, such as cousins. In several languages, this led to the creation of new words for 'brother' = 'male descendant of the same mother' (see ►ἀδελφός). The administrative meaning of the Greek word was first established in the collective formations φράτρα, -ία. Beside φράτρα, we find

Skt. bhrātrá- [n.] 'fraternal relation, brotherhood'; with φρατρία agrees OCS brat(r)ija 'brotherhood', Ru. brát'ja 'brothers' as a plur. of brat, epic Skt. bhrātrya- [n.] 'id.'.

•ETYM PIA *$p^hrēwar$ yielded Att. φρέᾱρ with quantitative metathesis. It derives from PIE *b^hreh_1-ur and is originally identical with Arm. ałbiwr, ałbewr 'well'. The remaining case-forms have an n-suffix, e.g. gen. *φρήϝα-τος < *b^hreh_1-un̥-, but Arm. has a gen. ałber with a generalized r-stem. A zero grade byform, IE *b^hrHun-, is preserved in the Germanic word for 'source', e.g. ON brunnr, Go. brunna < PGm. brunna(n)*. The geminate is traditionally explained from the zero grade of an enlarging en-suffix (brun-n-* beside brun-en-*).
This word for 'well' might in origin be a verbal noun to a verb for 'to bubble up, move heavily', of water, etc., as attested in Lat. fervō, -eō 'to seethe, boil', dē-fru-tum 'boiled down must, must-sap' < *b^her-u-, *b^hr-u-. Some have also seen the element *-u- in ►φορύνομαι. Other Greek words for 'well' may be inherited too: ►κρουνός and ►κρήνη. An innovation is ►πηγή, -αί 'fountain-head, water(s)'.

φρήν, -ενός [f.] 'midriff', also as the seat of mental activity, 'sense, soul, spirit, mind, heart' vel sim. (Il.). ◄IE? *$b^hrēn$, *b^hren-► •VAR Plur. φρένες, -ενῶν, dat. also -ασί (OAtt. epigr. VI^a, Pi.).
•COMP φρενοβλαβής 'mentally injured, insane' (Hdt., Eup. etc.), φρενήρης 'sound of mind' (Hdt., etc.), μετάφρενον [n.] 'which is behind the midriff, the upper part of the back, the back' (mostly epic since Il.). Ablauting -φρων enjoyed extreme productivity, e.g. ἄφρων 'out of one's mind, foolish' (Il.) whence ἀφραίνω, ἀφρονέω, ἀφροσύνη etc., εὔφρων, epic ἐΰφρων 'with a cheerful mind, happy, pleasing, friendly' (Il.), whence εὐφραίνομαι, -αίνω, ἐϋφρονέων (ptc.), εὐφροσύνη, etc.; on ►εὐφρόνη 'night', see s.v.; πρόφρων 'of one's own accord, inclined, benevolent' (Il., epic poet.), fem. πρόφρασσα after ἔκασσα (Hom.); on σώφρων see ►σῶς.
•DER 1. φρεν-ῖτις (scil. νόσος) [f.] 'mental disease, insanity, encephalitis', -ιτικός (medic., Hp., etc.). -ιτιάω, -ιτίασις, -ιτίζω, -ιτισμός (late). 2. φρεν-όω [v.] 'to bring to sense, instruct, inform' (trag., etc.), whence -ώσει· νουθετήσει and -ωτήριον· παραίνεσις (H.).
3. φρονέω 'to be minded, think, be wise' (Il.), also with κατα-, παρα-, συν- etc. It was reanalyzed from denominatives like ἀφρονέω, ὁμοφρονέω, etc. (to ἄ-, ὁμόφρων).

Thence φρόνημα (κατα- etc.), -ηματίας, -ηματώδης, -ηματίζομαι, -ηματισμός; -ησις (κατα-, παρα- etc.), -ητικός. Backformation: 4. φρόνις [f.] 'insight, skill' (γ 244, δ 258, Lyc., Opp.), beside more usual φρόνιμος 'sensible, wise' (IA); PN Φρονίμη mother of Battos, the founder of Cyrene (Hdt. 4, 154), -ιμότης, -ιμώδης, -ιμεύομαι, -ίμευμα, -ίμευσις (late).
With a suffix -τ-: 5. PN Φρόντις, -ιν, -ιδι [m., f.] (γ 282, P 40). 6. φροντίζω [v.] 'to consider, reflect, worry, be concerned' (Thgn., Sapph.), also with ἐκ-, συν-, etc.; possibly to φρονέω on the model of ἐρατίζω to ἔραμαι, φαντάζομαι to φαίνομαι, etc. If this analysis is correct, a back-formation to φροντίζω is: 7. φροντίς, -ίδος [f.] 'reflection, worry, concern' (Simon., Pi., A., etc.). Derivatives: φρόντισμα, -τισις, -τιστής, -τίστρια, -τιστήριον, -τιστικός. Isolated is φρανίζειν· σωφρονίζειν (H.); perhaps an old zero grade, like in ἀφραίνω?
•ETYM For the n-stem, we may compare other body-parts like ►αὐχήν, -ένος and ►ἀδήν, -ένος, and without ablaut σπλήν, -ηνός. A remnant of the zero grade is retained in the dat.pl. φρασί and in the yod-presents of the type ἀφραίνω. Semantically attractive is the connection with φράσσω 'fence, block', but this would presuppose that φρακ- (φραγ-) in φράσσω represents the zero grade of a nasalized *φρεγκ- (< IE *b^hrenk-), and that a lengthened grade nom.sg. *$b^hrēnk$ was incorporated into the n-stems after the loss of the final velar. A similar problem is presented by ►σπλήν versus σπλάγχνα.
Connection of φρήν 'mind' (vel sim.) with φράζομαι 'to think, consider', with the act. (causative) aor. πέφραδε, is semantically straightforward. A zero grade φραδ- with enlargement -δ- has several parallels (see ►φράζομαι), so this etymology is formally quite feasible. On φρένες in Homer, see Ireland and Hull Glotta 53: 183-195. On φρένες and φρόνησις, see Snell Glotta 55 (1977): 34-64.

φρῑμάσσομαι [v.] 'to snort with lust for life, behave unruly', of horses, goats etc. (Hdt., Theoc., AP, Ael., Poll.). ◄PG(V)►
•DER φριμαγμός [m.] 'snorting' (Lyc., D. H., Poll.).
•ETYM Expressive enlargement (after φρυάσσομαι?) of φρῑμάω 'id.' (Opp.), further unclear. The earlier connections with ON brími [m.] 'fire' and Skt. jarbhurīti 'to move heavily, stretch, sprawl' cannot be maintained. Similar words in similar meanings, apart from ►φρυάσσομαι, are ►βρῑμάομαι and ►σφρῑγάω. Fur.: 173, following Kuiper 1956: 215, assumes that ►βρῑμάομαι (etc.) is a Pre-Greek variant. This seems evident, cf. Fur.: 247: σφριαί· ἀπειλαί, ὀργαί from *σφριϝαί, with variation μ/ϝ.

'shivering, horrible, etc.'; also φρικνόν· φρικαλέον, δεινόν, φοβερόν 'awesome, fearsome' (H.), cf. ῥικνός; φριξός 'bristling', of hairs (Arist.), perhaps by reanalysis of the first member in verbal governing compounds, such as φριξοκόμης, φριξαύχην. Likewise probably in the PN Φρῖξος, also as a personification of shivering (AP).
Verbs: 1. φρίσσω 'to bristle up', of ears (of corn), hairs, etc., 'to shiver (of cold), shudder (of fear)' (Il.), aor. φρῖξαι, perf. πέφρῖκα, also with ἐπι-, ἀνα-, μετα-, etc. Thence φρικτός (ἀπό-, ἐπί-) 'shuddering, causing shiver' (Hell.+). Backformation: ἐπιφρίξ· ἡ ἐπανάστασις τῶν κυμάτων (EM). 2. Other sparse formations with the same meaning: φρικάζω (Poet. de herb.; also Hp.?), -ασμός [m.] (LXX), -ιάω (late medic.) with -ίασις (sch.), -όομαι ,-όω 'horrescō, horrificō' (gloss.), also φρίζω (*PMag. •ETYM Expressive formation, like the synonym ►φριμάσσομαι. Frisk suggests that there were possibly old contaminations, and adduces Güntert 1914: 160, who suggests a transfomation of φριμάσσομαι after ῥύαξ (instead of *ῥυάσσομαι). Yet, I am very reluctant to assume such contaminations. The word may well be Pre-Greek.

•ETYM The uncertain identification renders etymologizing difficult. Some similarity in form is found in Lat. fringilla 'finch' or 'sparrow', and in Slavic, Ru. bergléz 'goldfinch'; but it remains uncertain whether they are cognate, and they may as well be onomatopoeic formations. Benton JHS 81 (1961): 44ff., referring to the association with Φρύξ and the Phrygian god Sabazios in Ar., quite differently explains φρυγίλος as "the small Phrygian", i.e. 'the small foreign slave'.

•ETYM Without exact agreement outside Greek. A different vocalism is found in Lat. frīgō, -ere 'to roast', but it cannot be reconciled with φρύγω in a regular way. Unless the Latin word was borrowed from Greek via an intermediate language (where unrounding must have taken place), both languages could have borrowed the word from a third party.

(Thphr. etc.), with ἐμ- 'to engraft', -ισμός (Gp.), with ἐπι- 'to glean in a vineyard', metaphorically of a petty job (LXX), -ίς 'gleaned grape' (LXX, AP), metaphorically of the verses of epigones (Ar.). 13. φυλλάζω· frondesco (gloss.). 14. φυλλ-ιάω in -ιόωσαι [ptc.pl.f.] 'to run to leaf (without fruit)' (Arat.). 15. φυλλεῖν· ἀδολεσχεῖν (H.), of useless bragging, cf. 14.
•ETYM Possibly connected to Lat. folium 'leaf' as PIE *b^hol-io-, though the vowels do not seem to match. Vine 1999b: 564ff. explains this by assuming *o > u (Cowgill's Law) in the specific environment *-oli̯- > *-uli̯-. Quite a different formation with suffix -t- is found in Germanic, Tocharian and Celtic: OHG blat, MoHG Blatt, etc., ToA pält, ToB pilta 'leaf', all with zero-grade, and Celt., e.g. MIr. bláth 'blossom, flower' < *$b^hl\bar{o}$-tu-, OHG bluot 'flowering, blossom', etc. with full grade. See Beekes 1990: 375-381. A laryngeal may have been lost before yod in PIE *$b^hol(H)$-io-, which would enable comparison with the root *b^hlh_3-.

φύλοπις, -ιδος [f.] 'battle' (Il., epic; thence also in S., Ar., Theoc.). ◂PG▸ •VAR Acc. -ιδα, but also -ιν.
•ETYM Epic word only, without etymology. In antiquity, it was interpreted as a compound from φῦλον and ὄπα (ὄσσα) 'voice', which convinces neither semantically nor formally (one would have expected *φυλωπις). For understandable reasons, modern scholars compare φῦλον too, with different interpretations of the second member: to op- in Lat. ops, opus; to ὄπις 'bad look', i.e. 'enmity'; from *φυλο-λοπις to λέπω 'thrash' (see Frisk); all are quite hypothetic. The length of the ῡ can be metrically conditioned. No doubt a Pre-Greek word (but the comparisons in Fur.: 163 are not convincing).

•DER 1. φυή, Dor. -ά [f.] 'growth, stature, nature, being' (Il., epic poet., also late prose); also from the prefixed verbs, e.g. διαφυή 'joint, space between, layer, etc.' (Pl., X., Thphr., etc.); as a second member -φυής, e.g. μεγαλο-φυής 'of a great, noble nature' (Hell.+), -φυΐα [f.] (Iamb. etc.); also e.g. προσφυής 'grown, attached, fitting' (Od.); as a noun fem. -φυάς, e.g. ἀποφυάς, -άδος 'outgrowth, appendage' (Hp., Arist., Thphr.); hence the simplex φύος· φύτευμα, γέννημα (H.).
2. φῦμα [n.] 'growth, tumour, swelling' (IA, etc.), also ἔκ-, παρά-, πρόσ-, from ἐκφῦναι, etc. Thence -μάτιον, -ματίας, -ματώδης, -ματόομαι (Hp.). 3. φύτλη, Dor -α [f.] 'lineage, race' (Pi., AP, Orph.), -τλον [n.] 'plant' (epigr. Nicomedia); probably for -θλη, -θλον; furthermore φύτρα· φύσις, οἱ δὲ φυτήρια (H.). 4. φύσις [f.] 'growth, character, descent, nature, being, etc.' (κ 303), also ἀπό-, ἔκ-, σύμ-, etc. from ἀποφῦναι, etc.; as a first member e.g. in φυσιολόγος [m.] 'naturalist, natural philosopher', -λογία, -λογέω, -λογικός (Arist., etc.). Hence φυσ-ικός 'belonging to nature, naturalist, physical, physician' (X. Mem. 3, 9, 1, Arist., etc.), -ιμος 'fit for growing, breeding' (Thphr.), -ιόομαι [v.] in πεφυσιωμένος 'rooted' (Arist.), -ίωμα, -ίωσις 'natural tendency, habitude' (Hell.+); also ἐμφυσιόω [v.] 'to implant, infuse, inspire' (Hp., X., LXX etc.) (see ►φῦσα)? 5. φυτός 'grown by nature' (Pi.), 'planted' (LXX), in compounds, e.g. νεόφυτος 'newly planted' (Ar. Fr. 828, LXX, Hell.+); also act. in ἐλαιό-φυτος etc. (A. etc.); from the prefixed verbs, e.g. σύμφυτος 'grown together with, grown on, overgrown, innate' (Pi., IA).

6. φῦτόν [n.] 'growth, plant' (Il.). Hence several derivatives: φυτ-άς [f.] = -όν (Plu.), diminutive -άριον [n.] (Ar. Byz., Ath. etc.), -ιος 'begetting' (late), -ικός 'belonging to plants' (Arist. etc.), -ιαῖοι ὄρχοι (inscr. With enlargement -λ-: φυταλ-ιά, Ion. -ιή [f.] 'plantation, orchard, vineyard' (Il., Hell.), 'time of plantation' (Hp., Gal.), Φυτάλιος epithet of Poseidon, of Zeus, etc. (Corn., Orph., Poll.), Φυταλίδαι [m.pl.] Attic lineage with the eponym Φύταλος. With a combination of suffixes φυτάλμιος, epithet of parents, of Poseidon, of Zeus, etc. 'begetting, feeding, by birth' (trag., Hell.+); formation unclear. 7. See ►φυλή, -ον, and 8. ►φῖτυ.
•ETYM The whole verbal system is built on the primary intransitive aorist φῦναι, ἔφῡν. As an innovation, the factitive sigmatic aorist φῦσαι, ἔφῡσα arose, after ἔστην : ἔστησα, ἔβην : ἔβησα, ἔδυν : ἔδυσα, etc. Then, the presentic and future forms φύομαι, φύω, φύσομαι, φύσω followed.
The transitive/factitive forms have always been much less prominent than the old intransitive ones. The perfect, though in principle old, was influenced by the aorist, too. Several of the nouns may have PIE roots, too. Cognates of the aorist ἔφῡ: Skt. ábhūt 'he became' < PIE h$_1$é-b^{h}uh$_2$-t* with metathesis of b^{h}h$_2$u-* to b^{h}uh$_2$-*, OCS aor. 23sg. by, OLith. bu, Lat. fuī (OLat. fūī), etc. The perfect πέφυκα, πεφύασι agrees with Skt. babhū́va, but in both cases we have probably innovations against older Av. buuāuua < PIIr. b^{h}ub^{h}aHua*. Cognate forms or parallel formations of the nouns: φῦμα = Skt. bhū́man- [n.] 'earth, world, being', Alb. bimë 'plant'; φῠτόν = OIr. both 'cabin', all with a short ŭ from b^{h}h$_2$u-to-*, as against the long vowel in Skt. bhūtá- [n.] 'being, creature, past time' (after metathesis), Ru. byt 'being, way of life'. Further, φύσις (with -ῠ-) stands beside Skt. bhūtí-, bhū́ti- 'prosperity, power, riches'.
Kortlandt demonstrated that the root had the form b^{h}eh$_2$u-*, Kortlandt 1975: 3; Kortlandt Ériu 37 (1986): 90f.; a summary in Lubotsky 1995: 224ff.

From φύρω: 1. φύρδην [adv.] 'mingled, mixed up' (A., S., X. Plb., etc.), Dor. -δᾱν (S. [lyr.]). 2. φύρμα [n.] 'slime, filth, dung' (Nic.). 3. -μός [m.] 'mixture, confusion, disorder' (D. S., M. From φυράω: 1. φύραμα (προ-, ἐμ-) [n.] 'mix, dough' (com. Ephesus), -ατός 'kneaded' (Sor.).
•ETYM Frisk still assumes a yod-present *φυρ-ι̯ω as a derivative of a noun φυ-ρ-, or a zero grade verbal stem φῠρ- beside a hypothetical full grade *φερ-. Yet, such ablaut is now generally abandoned for Greek. An IE etymology seems impossible, so it is more probably a Pre-Greek word (note the semantic sphere). Formally, φύρω might be connected with ►πορφύρω 'to well up, heave', which could be reduplicated, but the semantics would be unclear; semantically, it could be connected with ►φορύνομαι, which would also point to irregular ablaut.

φῦσα [f.] 'breath', bellows' (mostly pl.), 'bladder, flatulence' (Il.), also metaphorically of a fire gushing forth (h. Merc. 114), 'crater of a volcano' (Str.); name of a fish in the Nile (Str., Ath.), cf. below on φύσαλος. ◂PG?▸

•ETYM Noun in -σᾰ, but the exact root cannot be determined. As a pre-form, one might assume φυ-, φυσ-, φυτ- or φυκ-, but none of these can be shown to have existed in Greek. Comparisons are made with e.g. Arm. p'uk' 'breath, wind, fart', plur. 'bellows' (but φῦσα cannot derive from *φυκ-ι̯α), Skt. phūtkaroti "to make a sound phut", 'to breathe, blow, etc.' (so φῦσα < *φυτ-ι̯α). Further Skt. phuphusa- [n.] 'lung'. One may connect Lat. pustula 'bladder', OCS puxati 'blow', Ru. pyxát' 'to breathe heavily, cough' < pous-, pūs-, etc.
Although we may clearly start from IE material, the word may well have a Pre-Greek origin; note e.g. the suffix of φῦσιγξ, and φυστή, φύσκη (Φυσάδεια is unclear). There is hardly any evidence for PIE *b^{h}us- (not in mentioned in Pok.); on *p^{h}us- (with a phoneme p^h- that is now abandoned), see Pok. 878.

3. Denominative verb *φωνάω, aor. φωνᾶσαι (Pi., also Sapph.), also in IA φωνῆσαι (Il.), in Hom. προσ-, μετεφώνεον, if need be also in -εε; but further φωνέω 'to sound, raise one's voice, speak' (Dor., IA), very often with prefix, e.g. προσ-, ἐπι-, ἀντι-, ἀνα-, δια-. The transition to the έω-class may have been favoured by the sound verbs in -έω as well as the numerous denominatives (decompounds) of the type ὁμοφωνέω (from ὁμόφωνος).
From φωνέω (προσ-, ἐπι-, etc.): φώνημα (προσ-, ἀνα-, ἐπι-) [n.] 'uttering, discourse' (S., Hell.+), -ησις (προσ-, ἀντι-, ἐκ-, etc.) [f.] 'the sounding, speaking' (Hell.+), -ητής (ἀνα-, ἀντι-, ἐπι-) [m.] 'speaker, etc.' (late), -ητήριος 'belonging to discourse' (Str. etc.), -ητικός (προσ-, ἀνα-, ἐπι-) 'belonging to voice, gifted with voice' (Hell.+).
•ETYM From the root of ►φημί with o-grade; compare ON bón, OE bēn < PGm. bōni-* 'question', Arm. ban 'word, speech'. Because the meaning of φωνή 'sound, voice' is not identical to 'saying', Frisk prefers the connection with OCS zvonъ, Ru. zvon 'sound', and the corresponding Alb. zë, Gheg zâ 'voice', from PIE *ǵ^{h}u̯ono- [m.]. •VAR Cf. χαμόν below.
•DER Besides χαβόν· καμπύλον, στενόν, also χαμόν· καμπύλον (H.).
•ETYM If the variation β/μ is reliable, the word is Pre-Greek. Traditionally compared with Lat. hāmus 'hook, fish-hook'. If this connection is correct, the Latin word could perhaps stem from a language cognate to Pre-Greek.

χάζομαι [v.] 'to retreat, draw back' (epic poet. Il., also X.). ◂IE *$\acute{g}^h eh_1$- 'abandon, go forth'▸ •VAR Aor. χάσ(σ)ασθαι, fut. χάσ(σ)ομαι, pass. ἀποχασθῇ· ἀποθάνῃ (H.). Very rarely act. (almost only in H.): χάζειν· ἀναχωρεῖν, φυλάσσεσθαι; προχάζοις· προβαίνοις, ἀναποδίζοις; aor. συγχάσαι· συγχωρῆσαι, ipv. ἀπόχασον· ἀποχώρησον; παράχασον· ἀναχώρησον, πρόχασον· πρόελθε; also ἀναχάζοντες (X. An. 4, 1,16 beside ἐπιδιώκοντες), always intr. like χάζομαι; the only exception is ἀνέχασσαν (Pi. N. 10, 69 [codd. ἀνέχασαν or ἀνέσχασαν]), which seems to mean 'caused to retreat'.
•COMP Often with ἀνα-, rarely with ἀπο- (λ 95, APl.), ὑπο-, μετα- (A. R.), δια- (X.), παρα- (H.).
•ETYM It is unnecessary to posit a root χαδ- with -δ-, since the facultative epic gemination in χάσσασθαι, χάσσομαι may be analogical, and the rare present χάζομαι can be explained as an innovation to the aorist. An exact agreement outside Greek is unknown. Beside the medial aor. χάσασθαι with short vowel, Old Indic has active forms with long vowel in ahās [3sg.], ahāsma [1pl.] 'to abandon, epudiate'. Ruijgh and Van Krimpen Mnem. 22 (1969): 113-115 assumed derivation from the root *$\acute{g}^h eh_1$-. The -α- remains unexplained under this account, however.

•ETYM The similarity with a Celto-Germanic word for 'javelin, spear' in OIr. gae, OHG gēr, etc., which is found as a loan both in Lat. gaesum and in Greek ▸γαῖσος, -ον, is perhaps no coincidence. We may tentatively reconstruct *$\acute{g}^h eh_2 i$-so-. However, further connection with Skt. héṣas- [n.] 'missile' and Skt. hinóti 'to urge on, hurl' is both formally and semantically unconvincing.

From the verbal stem: 1. χαρά [f.] 'joy' (Sapph., Att.). 2. χάρμη [f.] 'joy of battle, bellicosity' (Hom.), also 'battle' (Hom., Pi., Lyc.), 'joy' (Ps.-Phoc.); χαρμόφρων 'belligerent, combative' (h. Merc.), μενε-χάρμης, -ος 'persevering in battle' (Il.), ἱππιο-χάρμης 'fighting from horseback, charioteer' (Hom.); ἱππιο- for ἱππο- is metrical. 3. χάρμα (ἐπι-, κατα-) [n.] 'joy, delight, object of joy' (Il., epic poet., also late prose), opposed to πῆμα. 4. χαρμονή [f.] 'joy, pleasure, delight' (S., E., Pl., X.), probably after ἡδονή, see Wyss 1954: 39[1]), with -ικός (Procl.). 5. χαρμο-σύνη [f.] 'id.' (LXX), -συνος [adj.] 'filled with joy', -συνα [n.pl.] 'festivity' (Hdt. 3, 27). 6. χαρ-τός 'joyous, delectable' (Archil., Att.), with ἐπί- 'id.', also 'gloating' (Att.), -χάρτης 'id.' (com. V^a); on -χαρτος in PNs (e.g. Δαμό-χαρτος) see Bechtel 1917a: 17f. 7. -χαρής derived from the prefixed verbs (after χαρῆναι): ἐπι-, περι-, προ-, ὑπερ-χαρής 'delighting, filled with joy, raptured, etc.' (IA); as a second member extremely productive in late Greek, especially in poetry, e.g. ὁπλο-, μουσο-χαρής; likewise in PNs like Θυμο-χάρης, Χάρης, -ητος.
B. From the present stem: 1. χαιρ-ηδών, -όνος [f.] = χαρά (Ar. Ach. 4), like ἀλγηδών. 2. χαιρο-σύνη [f.] = χαρά (epigr. Marathon II^p, H.). 3. χαιρητικός 'happy, cheerful' (Vett. Val.). 4. χαιρετίζω 'to say χαίρετε, to greet', with -τισμός [m.] 'greeting, attendance' (Plb., LXX); cf. αἱρετίζω. 5. As a first member in PNs, e.g. Χαιρο-κλῆς, Χαιρε-κράτης, to which short names like Χαιρύλος. 6. χαιρε-κακέω, -κακία, -κακος are rare and late for ἐπιχαιρε-κακέω (etc.) 'to be gloating' (Arist., com. IV^a), cf. ἐπίχαρτος above.
Independent of the verb is the old substantive χάρις, gen. -ιτος, acc. -ιν [f.] 'grace, beauty, delight, boon, gratefulness, thanks', also personified plur. 'the Graces' (Il.). Compounds, e.g. χαρι-δώτης (Dor. [Cyrene] -ας) [m.] epithet of Hermes, Dionysus, Zeus (h. Hom.), PNs like Χαρι-γένης, χαριτο-βλέφαρος 'with gracious eyes (eyelids)' (Eub., Att. epigr.); ἄ-χαρις 'without grace, unpleasant, disagreeable' (Thgn., Sapph., Hdt., trag.), also ἀ-χάρι-τος 'id.' (Hdt., E.); in the same mg. (from χαρίζομαι) ἀχάριστος (θ 236), compar. ἀχαρίστερος (υ 392) for ἀχαριστότερος), with -έω, -ία (Att.); opposite εὔ-χαρις, -τος, -στος with -έω, -ία; ἐπί-χαρις 'attractive, charming' (Att. since A.).

From χάρις: 1. χαρί-εις 'attractive, charming' (Il.), χαριτό-εις 'id.' (Anacr.), also χάριτος = Lat. gratus (?) (Nysa I^a, letter of a proconsul). 2. χαρ-ίσιος 'accompanied by χάρις, filled with χάρις' (Arist., Call. Fr. 193, late), also a cake (com.), after ἀφροδίσιος, etc. 3. χαριτ-ήσιον [n.] 'thank-offering' (late), 'spell of love' (PMag.), -ήσια [n.pl.] 'festival honouring the Charites' (Boeot.), after φιλοτήσιος, etc., also -ώσιος (Ibyc., Rhegin.) like ἀνακ-ώσιος etc., see Chantraine 1933: 42. 4. χαριτ-ία [f.] 'delightful jest, joke' (X. Cyr. 2, 2, 13), enlargement in -ία (see Scheller 1951: 38).
Denominative verbs: 5. χαρίζομαι (-ίζω) 'to be attentive to sbd., bestow a favour or service on sbd., to give (cheerfully), etc.' (Il.), also with ἀντι-, ἐπι-, κατα-, προσ-, etc., with χάρισμα (εὐ-, ἀπο-) [n.] 'grace, favour' (late), -ισμός [m.] 'id.' (late and rare), -ιστεῖον [n.] 'thank-offering' (Thera, Cnidos), -ιστήριον [n.] 'id.', with -ιστήριος 'belonging to the thank-offering' (X., Hell and late), -ιστικός 'generous' (Democr., Aristeas). 6. χαριτ-όομαι 'to be favoured, blessed', -όω 'to favour, bless' (LXX, NT).
χαροπός epithet of animals of prey, of people, of the sea, etc., esp. referring to the eyes and the cool blue-gray eye-color, 'fierce, wild, cold' vel sim. (since λ 611), with -ότης [f.] (Hell. and late); also (ἐπι-)χάροψ 'id.' (Opp., pap. II^p).
Extensive discussion of χαίρω and derivatives, χάρις and χαροπός in Homer in Latacz 1966: 20ff.
•ETYM χάρις is a zero grade ι-stem, a type found in ῥάχις and in the adverbs ἅλις and πάλιν. A yod-present like in χαίρω is found in Skt. háryati 'to find pleasure, enjoy, like' < full grade $\acute{g}^h$er-i̯e-, and in Italic, e.g. U heries [2sg.fut.] 'volēs', OLat. horitur 'to urge, exhort' (Enn.). In other languages, we find several isolated nouns that belong here too: in Germanic, e.g. OHG ger 'desiring, longing' with gerōn 'to desire' and the widespread n-derivative in OHG gern 'desirous, eager', Go. faihu-gairns 'φιλάργυρος', etc., adverb OHG gerno 'gladly', etc. Lubotsky IIJ 32 (1989): 107 thinks the root was seṭ because of Skt. harayanta (RV 4, 37, 2) < $\acute{g}^h$orH-eie-. This nicely explains the Greek a-vocalism.
A lengthened grade $\acute{g}^h$ēr-i- is continued in Arm. jir 'gift, mercy, favour', adverb jri 'for free' (see Clackson 1994: 180f.), a full grade in Av. zara- [m.] 'ambition, goal'. The connection of ToB kartse, acc. krent 'good' must be left aside, as the interpretation of the the To. word is ambiguous (cf. Adams 1999: 146f. Within Greek, εὐ-, ►δυσχερής is related.

χαίτη [f.] 'curly hair, loose flowing hair, horse's mane' (Il., epic poet.), also 'lion's mane' (E., Arist.), metaph. 'leaves, foliage' (Theoc., Call., Str.), 'crest' (Plu.). ◁IE g^heh$_2$it- (?) 'curly hair'▷ •COMP Often as a second member, e.g. κυανο-χαίτης 'with dark hair', especially of Poseidon, 'black-maned' (Il., epic); on the voc. κυανο-χαῖτα in nominatival function see Risch 1954: 389ff.
•DER χαιτήεις (shortened -έεις), Dor. -άεις 'with long hair, with a long mane' (Pi., Semon., A. R.), also of plants 'rich in leaves' (Nic.); χαίτ-ωμα [n.] 'crest' (A. Th. 385), poetical enlargement, see Chantraine 1933: 186. Hypostasis ἀναχαιτ-ίζω [v.] 'to cast

(the horseman) over the mane, to throw the mane back, overthrow, revolt, rebel, block' (S. Fr. 179, E., D., Hell. and late), with -ισις, -ισμα, -ισμός 'barricade, obstruction' (late).
•ETYM Old word for 'hair, mane' with close cognates in Iranian and Celtic: Av. gaēsa- [m.] 'curly hair', gaēsu- 'curly haired', MoP gēs 'hair that hangs down, curls', MIr. gaiset [f.] 'bristly hair'. Both groups continue an s-stem. Normal laryngealistic reconstruction requires a full grade *$g^{h}eh_{2}it$-, which is a rather awkward vocalization of the root. This is all the more problematic, as the word definitely seems IE. Or do we have to assume *$g^{h}h_{2}eit$-?

•ETYM The gloss of Hesychius shows that this is a Pre-Greek word, and that it has nothing to do with the verb ►χαλάω; see Fur.: 185, 290, 352.

Adesp.*, Luc.), 'to suffer from pimples' (Ar. Eq. 381, Arist.), also with ἐπι-, κατα-; -ιάω 'id.' (late medic.); -ωσις [f.] 'formation of pimples or granules' (Gal.).
•ETYM Formed with the feminine suffix -ι̯α- from a stem ending in dental, found in Slavic: Polab. zlåd 'hail', Pol. żłód 'glaze', etc. < PSl. želd-*; often found with a velar extension, e.g. OCS žlědica 'glazed frost', Ru. oželédica 'id., fringe of ice on the snow'. In order to combine the Greek word, we have to posit a root *$g^{h}lh_{2}$-d- and assume that the Greek form continues the full grade of the suffix, so *$g^{h}lh_{2}$-ed-, where Slavic points to *$g^{h}elH$-d-. The latter form is also found in Iranian: MoP žāla 'hail, hoarfrost' < PIr. žarda-* < IE *$g^{h}elh_{2}d$-.

See ►χαλάδριον.
On itself stands χαλαρός (ἐπι-, ὑπο-) 'slackened, flaccid, loose, lax' (Hp., Att.), with -αρότης (X., Gall.), -αρόομαι (Erot.). Here probably also belongs the PN Χαλακίας (Thess. [I^{a}]); cf. Dor. χαλάξαι (Pi.) and Bechtel 1917a: 46f.
•ETYM The pair χαλάσ(σ)αι : χαλαρός goes like ταλάσσαι : τάλαρος, λαγάσ(σ)αι : λαγαρός, ἱλάσ(σ)ασθαι : ἱλαρός, etc.
Etymology unknown. It seems that the aorist χαλάσ(σ)αι (innovated presents χαλάω, -αίνω) is a primary formation. The connection with Arm. xał 'game', xałam 'to play' by Meillet 1936: 36 would require IE *k^{h}-, and should therefore be abandoned.

•ETYM Formation like μαινάς, λαικάς, λωγάς, etc. (Chantraine 1933: 352). The lexicographers connected it with χαλάω, which is probably a folk etymology. Fur.: 138 connects γαλιάω = ἀκολασταίνω (Com. Adesp. 967) and on account of this variant thinks the word is Pre-Greek. As χαλ- is hard to explain from IE, and given the semantic sphere, this is quite likely.

χαλῖνός [m.] 'bridle, rein, bit' (Il.), also metaph. 'marine ropes' (Pi., E.). ◀PG(S)▶ •VAR Aeol. χάλιννος (Hamm 1957: 36^{90}), plur. also -α.

•DER Diminutive χαλιν-άριον [n.] (late), -ῖτις [f.] epithet of Athena in Corinth (Paus.), as she bridled Pegasus for Bellerophon; χαλιν-όομαι [v.] 'to be furnished with reins, rein in' (IA), also with ἐν-, ἀπο-, etc.; thence -ωσις [f.] 'reining in' (X.), -ωτήρια [n.pl.] metaph. 'ropes used for mooring' (E., Opp., Nonn.).
•ETYM Borrowed into Skt. as khalīna-, khalina- 'bit of a bridle'. Foreign, i.e. Pre-Greek origin is probable, as it is difficult to explain χαλ- from IE ($*g^hh_2l$-, $*g^hlH$-V- are unmotivated) and as a suffix -ῖν- is frequent in Pre-Greek (κύμινον, πυτίνη, ῥητίνη). ►εὔληρα is often taken to be an inherited word for 'bridle', but this is probably Pre-Greek, too.

χάλιξ, -ικος [m., f.] 'small stone, gravel, rubble used for filling up, mortar for stone building' (Th., Ar., Att. inscr., Arist., Hell. inscr. and pap., Str.). ◀?▶
•VAR For the gender cf. ►λίθος.
•DER χαλικ-ώδης 'like rubble' (Thphr.), -ώματα [n.pl.] 'rubble and mortar, stone-mortar' = Lat. caementa (gloss.).
•ETYM There is no convincing etymology: the general similarity with Lat. silex 'gravel', MIr. scellec 'rock', OCS skolьka 'shell' is not enough for an IE etymology to be credible. The formation is like κύλιξ, ἄλιξ, ῥῆνιξ, etc. (see Chantraine 1933: 382). It is probably a loan, see Fur.: 137, 384, who connects both Lat. calx 'stone (of a board game), limestone' (whence OHG kalch, etc.) and Sum. kalga 'limestone', Babyl. kalakku. It can also be assumed that the Latin word was borrowed from Greek; note that the appurtenance of the eastern words is doubted by DELG. In this case, Pre-Greek origin is thinkable.

χάλις, -ιν [m.] 'unblended wine' (Hippon. 73 = 67 Masson, epigr. Cyrene I^p). ◀PG(V)▶

•DER Perhaps derived is ►χαλιμάς, epithet of the Βάκχαι (but also connected with ►χαλάω).

•ETYM Fur.: 389 compares φαλικρόν· ἄκρατον (H.). The gloss also shows a form in -κρος, like in χαλικρότερος, which therefore cannot be explained as due to haplology (Frisk); cf. ►φαλακρός: it is a typical Pre-Greek form.

Gr.), -εῶνος [m.] 'forge' (θ 273, A. R. 3, 41). 2. χαλκ-ίον (-εῖον) [n.] 'cupreous, brazen tableware' (Att., Hell. pap.), also 'copper coins' (com.), with -ίδιον [n.] 'small cupreous tableware' (com. V^a). 3. χαλκ-ύδρια [n.pl.] 'small change' (pap. I^a), -ύδριον = -ός (disparaging, Zos. Alch., Theognost. Can.). 4. χαλκ-ίς, -ίδος [f.] name of a bird (Ξ 291, Arist.) = ►κύμινδις; referring to the color, also name of a plant (Ps.-Dsc.), name of several fishes, probably 'sardine' (Epich., Arist.), perhaps also after the sounds it produced (Strömberg 1943: 74f.), name of a poisonous lizard (Arist., Plin.); as a TN town on Euboea (after the copper-mines), whence -ιδικός, -ιδική; finally also = -ίς as a fish- and lizard-name, probably with allusion to the TN (Strömberg op. cit. 86). 5. χαλκ-άς, -άδος [f.] = χαλκάνθεμον (Ps.- Dsc.). 6. χαλκ-ίτης [f.] -ῖτις (λίθος) 'copper ore' (Arist., Plu.), name of a mineral 'rock-alum' (medic., pap.), also = χαλκάς (Ps.-Dsc.); -είτης = -εύς (Pisidia), itacistic or to χαλκεύς? Cf. Redard 1949: 36.
B. Adjectives: 1. χάλκ-ειος (epic, also Hell. and late prose), epic Ion. -εος (cf. S. Schmid 1950: 6ff.), Aeol. Dor. -ιος (Myc. ka-ki-jo [du.], ka-ke-ja-pi [ins.f.]), Att. -οῦς 'brazen, cupreous', also designation of a coin (Att., Hell. pap.), whence -ιαῖος 'worth a χαλκοῦς' (pap. III^a, after δραχμιαῖος, ἡμιωβολιαῖος), fem. -ιαία and -ιεία designations of taxes (Hell. pap.); χαλκ-ιδῖτις [f.] 'low-priced prostitute' (Com. Adesp.). 2. χαλκῆ (εἰκών) [f.] 'bronze statue' (Antig. Mir., D. L.). 3. χάλκινος 'made of ore, concerning copper coins' (Hell. and late pap.). 4. χαλκικός 'consisting of copper coins' (pap. III^a). 5. χαλκ-ώδης 'bronze-like' (Thphr.).

C. Verbs: 1. χαλκ-εύω 'to forge' (Σ 400), also intr. 'to be a blacksmith' (Att.), formally from χαλκεύς, but also referring to χαλκός, rarely prefixed, e.g. with κατα-, ἐπι-, προ-, ἀπο-. Thence -εία [f.] 'the art of forging' (Hp., Pl.), 'forge' (Hero), -ευμα [n.] 'what is forged, forged tool' (A.), -ευτής = -εύς (AP), -ευτικός 'belonging to the art of forging, versed in the art of forging' (Hp., X., Arist.), -ευτήριον = -εῖον (gloss.). 2. χαλκ-όομαι [v.] 'to be coated with bronze' (Pi., Hdt., LXX, D. S.), 'to turn into ore' (AP), rarely with κατα-, περι- (to κατά-, περί-χαλκος); thence -ωμα [n.] designation of several copper instruments (Att.), with -ωμάτιον [n.] (Delos II^a), -ωματᾶς [m.] 'copper smith' (pap. III^p). 3. χαλκ-ίζω 'to play coin-spinning with copper coins' (Alex., Herod., Poll.), with -ισμός [m.] 'game of coin-spinning' (Poll., Eust.), 'to glisten or sound like copper' (late); prefixed περι-χαλκίζομαι (to περί-χαλκος) 'to become coated with bronze' (LXX), ἀπο-χαλκίζω 'to take away the bronze' (AP 11, 283; word-play with Χαλκίς), ὑπο-χαλκίζω 'to look somewhat bronze-colored' (EM), ὑπεχάλκισα· πρὸς χαλκοῦ ὑπεθέμην (H.).
D. Adverb χαλκίνδα (scil. παίζειν)· τὸ εἰς χαλκὸν κυβεύειν (H.).
•ETYM An old IE word for 'ore, copper, bronze' is still retained in Skt. áyaḥ, Lat. aes, Gm., e.g. Go. aiz [n.]. The prehistory of Greek χαλκός is obscure. An IE term is improbable, as a word with an aspirate and a voiceless stop is not tolerated. The similarity with the word for 'purple', κάλχη, also χάλκη and χάλχη, is hardly accidental. It would point to an original meaning 'red metal' for χαλκός (χαλκὸς ἐρυθρός I 365), which is conceivable. Connection with the Balto-Slavic word for 'iron' (Lith. geležìs, OPr. gelso, Ru. želézo) is phonetically unfeasible, but we could have to do with independent loans from a common eastern source. In such a framework, the connection with κάλχη could be maintained too.
It is also tempting to connect the Hitt. (Hattic-Hurritic) word for 'iron', ḫapalki- (or apalki-); the imperfect phonetic agreement would be due to incorrect rendering of a foreign word (Pisani AION 7 (1966): 46f.).

χαμαί [adv.] 'to the earth, on the earth' (Il.). ◂IE *d^{h}ǵ^{h}em- 'earth'▸ •COMP Extremely productive as a first member, e.g. χαμαι-πετής 'falling, fallen to the ground, lying on the ground, futile' (Pi., trag., also Pl., Plb.), univerbation of χαμαὶ πεσεῖν; χαμαί-ζηλος originally "striving to the earth", 'low, base, small', also (scil. δίφρος) 'footstool' (Hp., Pl., Arist.), χαμαι-εύνης, plur. -εῦναι 'having its lair on the earth' (P 235, Emp.), fem. -ευνάδες (Od.), with elision χαμ-εύνη (Poll., H., AP), χάμ-ευνᾰ [f.] 'lair on the earth' (Att. inscr., A.), see Solmsen 1909: 256f.
On χαμαι- in plant- and animal-names Strömberg 1940: 109ff.; on χαμαι-λέων (perhaps a calque from Semitic), see Lewy KZ 58 (1931): 33; on this also Dawkins JHS 56 (1936): 5ff.
•DER χαμ-ᾶζε 'to the ground' (Hom., also trag. and late prose), after Ἀθήναζε, etc. (accentuation acc. to Hdn. Gr. 2, 951 and others); after this χαμ-ᾶθεν 'from the earth, from the ground' (Hdt., Att. com.), also -αῖθεν (A.D., Plu.), Aeol. -άδις 'to the ground' (Hom., A. [lyr.]), like ἄλλυδις etc., Dor. -άνδις (Theognost.).
From χαμαί: χαμ-ηλός 'low' (Pi., X., Nic., Str.), after ὑψηλός; χαμ-ῖτις (ἄμπελος) 'low' (Gp., Suid., Eust.).

•ETYM A frozen case-form of the word for 'earth', usually explained as a dative; cf. ▸πάλαι, ▸παραί. We can compare it with Lat. humī 'on the ground' < QIE d^{h}ǵ^{h}om-ei, but the stem vowel is different. With e-vocalism we find OPr. semmai 'down'. Probably, all are independent formations. •VAR Aor. χαδεῖν (epic Il., also Hp. and Ar. Ra. 260 [lyr.]), fut. χείσομαι (σ 17), perf. (with present mg.) ptc.acc.sg. κεχανδότα (Ψ 268, δ 96), ind. κέχανδε· χωρεῖ (H.), plpf. κεχάνδει, with v.l. κεχόνδει (Ω 192).
•COMP Never with prefix; as a second member in εὐ-χανδής 'ample' (Nic., Man.), εὐρυ-χαδής (AP, Luc.), -χανδής (Eust.) 'id.'.
•ETYM A regular formal system, with a zero grade nasal present, zero grade thematic aorist, and a full grade medial future. Only the perfect forms with -αν- are divergent; if not innovated after the present, they must have pushed original κέχονδα out of the system (retained in the v.l. κεχόνδει).
Beside this archaic verb, continued only in the epic tradition, Latin has a formation with fixed prefix and generalised e-vocalism: prae-hendō, -hendī, -hēnsum 'to grasp, seize', the stemvowel of which may represent both IE *g^{h}end- and *g^{h}n̥d-. Zero grade forms are found also in Celtic, e.g. OIr. ro-geinn 'he finds place in' (IE *g^{h}d-n-). A full grade root is found in Alb., e.g. gjëndem 'I am found'. These nasalized forms probably go back on a nasal present; beside them stand several forms without nasal, like Lat. praeda 'booty' < prai-hed-ā, and the Germanic verb ON geta 'to reach, produce' (> MoE get), Go. bi-gitan 'εὑρίσκειν', OHG pi-gezzan 'reach', fir-gezzan 'forget', etc.
Meier-Brügger MSS 50 (1989): 87-90 adduces the adverb χονδήν 'in capacity' (SEG 21 (1965): 644, 19) and suggests a form ἀχονδῆς for ΑΧΟΝΔΕΣ in SEG 13 (1956): 13, 251.

χάννα [f.] 'kind of sea bass, Serranus (cabrilla)' (Epich., Arist., Numen. apud Ath., pap. I^p, etc.). ◂PG(V)▸ •VAR Also χάννος [m.].
•ETYM In view of the characterization by Epich. as μεγαλοχάσμων, connection with χανεῖν 'to yawn' (see ▸χάσκω) with expressive gemination has been proposed (Strömberg 1943: 53). Extensive treatment in Thompson 1947 s.v., where foreign origin (Eg. chnā name of an unknown fish) is considered. Fur.: 351 compares χέννιον (H.), which makes Pre-Greek origin probable (α/ε).

χάος, -εος, -ους [n.] 'chaos', used as a designation for what was first by Hes. Th. 116, usually (e.g. Arist.) taken as '(unlimited) empty space' (Ibyc., B., Ar.), later 'wide chasm, abyss' (Hell.). ⊲?⊳

•DER χαόω 'to devour', aor. -ῶσαι (Tab. Defix., Simp. and Olymp. VI[p]).

Besides χαῦνος 'slack, porous, loose, bloated, puffed up, vain, frivolous' (Pi., IA). Some compounds, e.g. χαυνο-πολῖται [m.pl.] "vain citizens" (Ar. Ach. 635 [anap.]), χαυνό-πρωκτος 'having slack or bloated bottoms' (ibid. 104), ὑπό-χαυνος 'somewhat slack, vain' (late). Abstract χαυνότης [f.] 'slackness, vanity' (Pl., Arist., Plu.); χαῦναξ in χαυνάκων· χαυνοποιῶν, οἱ δὲ χαυνολόγων (H.); χαυν-όομαι [v.] 'to become slack or vain, etc.' (Alc., IA), also with ἐκ-, etc. Thence -ωσις [f.] 'relaxation, puffing up' (Ar., Hell. and late), -ωμα [n.] 'dispersed earth', -ωτικός 'making loose' (Plu.); χαυνιάζε· πλανᾷ (H.).

Also χαυλι-όδων (see ► ὀδών) with a suffix -λ-?

•ETYM Against the idea that χάος would be 'the empty space', first expressed by Aristotle and followed by most scholars, others interpreted it as a 'chasm' or an 'abyss'. Morphologically, a connection with χαῦνος (with remarkable barytone accent) may be supposed: χάος < *χάϝος beside χαῦνος, like ἔρεβος to ἐρεμνός < *ἐρεβνός. As a basic meaning 'loose, with holes' is quite possible for χαῦνος, an original meaning 'hole, empty space, yawning opening' is quite thinkable for χάος. Therefore χάος and χαῦνος were since long connected with ► χάσκω, χάσμα, χανεῖν, ► χήμη, etc.

Formally close are some Germanic and Baltic words for 'palate': OHG guomo, ON gómr [m.], etc. < IE *$g^heh_2$-mn- beside OHG goumo [m.] < PGm. gauma(n)-, Lith. gomurỹs, etc.

From χαρακτήρ: χαρακτηρικός = χαρακτηριστικός (Phld., etc.), χαρακτηρ-ίζω (δια-, μετα-) [v.] 'to form, stamp, designate, characterize' (Hell. and late), whence -ισμός, -ισμα, -ιστικός (late); χαρακτηριάζω [v.] 'to coin, mint' (Samos I[p]). 5. χάρακτης [m.] 'coiner, minter' (Man.), παρα- 'forger' (Vett. Besides χάραξ, -ακος [m., f.] 'pointed stake, vine-prop, fortifying pale, stockade, palisade' (Att. Hell. and late), also as a fish name (Diph. Siph., Opp.); see Strömberg 1943: 36, Thompson 1947 s.v.; χαρακο-βολία [f.] 'raising of a palisade' (LXX), ὠμο-χάραξ 'prop for the forks of vines' (Gp.). Thence: 1. χαρακ-ίας [m.] (κάλαμος) 'fit as a stake or palisade' (Thphr.), also as a plant name, 'kind of euphorbia' (Dsc.), see Strömberg 1937: 91 and Strömberg 1940: 107; as a fish name (Gp., see χάραξ). 2. χαρακίτης [m.] 'kind of euphorbia' (late), also = 'living behind a fence' (βιβλιακός = conventual), 'cut off from the world' (Timo). 3. χαράκια· ὑποστηρίγματα (H.). 4. χαρακόω (περι-, ἀπο-) [v.] 'to furnish with stakes, build a palisade' (Aesch., Arist., Hell. and late), whence -ωμα (περι-) 'site secured with palisades' (X., Arist., Hell. and late), -ωσις 'palisading, propping up of vines' (Lycurg., Hell. and late), -ών 'vineyard with propped up vines' (pap. III[p]).

•ETYM χαράσσω is both earlier and more frequently attested than χάραξ; still χαράσσω < *χαράκ-ι̯ω must be a denominative formation from the latter. For the suffix, cf. πίναξ, κάμαξ, κλῖμαξ, etc. Without etymology. Connection with Lith. žeriù, žeȓti 'to scrape', with žarstýti 'to poke' does not explain the Greek formation. In view of the suffix, the word is most probably Pre-Greek (not in Fur.).

C. Verbs: 1. χασκ-άζω 'to gape at, gaze at' (Ar. V. 695 [anap.]), with χάσκ-αξ, -ακος [m.] 'gazer' (Eust.). 2. χασκ-ωρεῖν· περιβλέπειν (H.), after θεωρεῖν etc. 3. χανύειν· βοᾶν, χανύσσει· βοᾷ (cod. βία), καλεῖ (H.); to this Χανύ-λαος etc. (Pharsalos), see Bechtel 1917b: 464. 4. iterative (Schwyzer: 719) χηνῆσαι· καταμωκήσασθαι, with χήνημα· καταμώκημα (H.).

D. Rare compounds: κατωμόχανε [voc.] = χαίνων κατ' ὤμου, 'usque ad humeros hians' (Hippon. 28), cf. Masson ad loc.; καταχήνη [f.] 'scorn, mockery' (Ar. V. 575, Eq. 631), = καταχάσμησις, κατάγελως (H.), cf. καταχήνῃ· καταγελάσῃ, μυκτηρίσῃ, ἐξουθενίσῃ (H.).
•ETYM The pair χανεῖν and κέχηνα is old; innovations are the future χανοῦμαι, the present χαίνω and the sigm. aor. ἔχηνα. The ske/o-present χάσκω is old, too, and may derive from k^{h}an-ske/o-. So we are dealing with a root PGr. k^{h}an- < PIE ǵ^{h}h$_2$n-*. χανεῖν and χάνος further agree with a North Germanic word: ON gan [n.] 'opening of the mouth, call, cry', also 'throat, gill' (MoSw., MoNw.), and the weak verb gana 'to open wide, desire, gape'. The root ǵ^{h}eh$_2$-* seems to appear unenlarged in ► χήμη, and it may of course also be present in χάσκω. The nouns χάσμα, -μη can be explained from χάσκω as well as from χανεῖν (cf. φάσμα to φαίνω). The situation strongly reminds of PGr. p^{h}an-* < b^{h}h$_2$-n-*.
A root ǵ^{h}Hi-* in the same meaning is found in Lat. hīscō 'to open the mouth', OHG gīēn, ON gína 'to yawn', OHG ginēn 'to be wide open', MoHG gähnen 'to yawn', Hitt. kīnu-^{zi} 'to break open (by force)', also in Lat. hiāre, hiō = Lith. žióti, 1sg. žióju, OCS 1sg. zějǫ, ToB kāy- 'to open', pass. ptc. kakāyau. This was perhaps an i-present to ǵ^{h}eh$_2$-* (though some of the forms seem to presuppose ǵ^{h}eh$_1$-*). It is unclear if ► χῑράς can be related to this root. Cf. also ► χάος and ► χήν.

•DER χατίς (leg. χάτις?)· ἐπιθυμία, χρῆσις 'desire, use' (H.) is probably a back-formation.
Beside this, we find a frozen dative χήτεϊ, χήτει 'out of lack (or desire)' (Il., poet., also late prose), which may derive from the noun χῆτος· ἔνδεια, στέρησις 'need, deprivation' (H.), or possibly from *χῆτις. Thence χητοσύνη 'lack, atrophy' (AP 9, 408), χητεία· χρεία 'need' (H.) (where cod. χηρ- has a wrong position in the alphabet), χητίζω = χατίζω (EM).

From the verbal stem χόδανον· τὴν ἕδραν (H.), χοδιτεύειν· ἀποπατεῖν (H.) (to *χοδίτης), μυό-χοδον [n.] 'mice droppings' (late), as a term of abuse μυόχοδος (γέρων) = οὐδενὸς ἄξιος (Men. 363 Koe.).

•ETYM The yod-present χέζω agrees with Alb. dhjes 'to shit' < IE ǵʰed-ie/o-*; beside these, we find a late thematic root-present in Skt. hadati 'id.'.

The root is also attested in nominal formations: Arm. jet, -oy 'tail' < IE ǵʰedos-* or ǵʰed-o-*; an s-stem also in Av. zadaŋha [acc.du.] 'both buttocks, hindmost', apa-zaδah- 'with the ass backwards (?)'.

•ETYM The analysis of the rare word depends on the interpretation of verse-final χεειαῖς in Nic. If not adapted to the metre, it must stand for *χεϝε(σ)-ιά, whence by contraction χειά, -ιή.

The further assessment is uncertain; one has thought of Lat. fovea (dismissed in De Vaan 2008) and of ► χάος (Bechtel 1914 s.v.). If ► ὀχεή is a variant with prothetic vowel, the word may be Pre-Greek.

•ETYM An inherited word for 'winter' or 'snow', with numerous representatives in various languages:

1. An n-stem like in χεῖμα and χειμών is found in Skt. loc. héman 'in winter' < IE *ǵ^{h}eim-en and in Hitt. gimmi, gimmant- 'winter' < *ǵ^{h}im-n-i, *ǵ^{h}im-n-ent-. Alb. (Gheg) dimën is from *ǵ^{h}eimen- or *ǵ^{h}imen- (Hamp IF 66 (1961): 52ff.). Skt. hemantá- [m.] is derived with the suffix -ta-.

2. To χειμερ-ινός, -ιος, -ος: Arm. jmeṙn 'winter' < *ǵ^{h}imer-n-, Lat. hībernus 'winterly' < *ǵ^{h}eim-r-ino-. An -r- also in Alb. (Tosk) dimër(ë) 'winter', but from secondary transition n > r (Jokl IF 36 (1916): 130ff.).

3. χιών corresponds to Arm. jiwn 'snow' (cf. ► κίων to Arm. siwn), from IE nom. *ǵ^{h}iōm (with final -m > -n in both languages). The m-stem also in Lat. hiems, hiemis [f.] 'winter, storm' from the acc. *ǵ^{h}i-em-m, and in YAv. ziiå < IE *ǵ^{h}iōms, acc. ziiąm 'winter' (after the ā-stems), OAv. gen. zimō.

4. χίμ-ετλον, δύσ-χιμος from *ǵ^{h}im-o- like in Skt. himá- [m.] 'cold, frost, snow', hímā- [f.] 'winter'; as a second member in śatá-hima- 'of a hundred winters' = 'a hundred years (old)', just like Lat. bīmus from *bi-himos 'two years old'.

IE *ǵ^{h}eim-h_2 is found in Balto-Slavic, e.g. Lith. žiemà, Ru. zimá.

An Indo-Iranian word for 'winter' in Av. zaiian- [m.], zaiiana- 'winterly', Skt. hāyaná- [m., n.] 'year', also [adj.] 'belonging to the year, yearly', was thought to derive from IE *ǵ^{h}ei-en-. However, we may better assume thematic *ǵ^{h}eim-n-o-. Still, it is most probable that the -m- in *ǵ^{h}eim-, etc. is originally a suffix.

•ETYM The dialectal forms Dor. χηρ-, and Aeol. χερρ- correspond nicely to Hitt. keššar < *ǵ^{h}es-r. The oldest inflected forms in Hittite are acc. kiššeran, gen. kiš(ša)raš < *ǵ^{h}s-er-m, *ǵ^{h}s-r-os (see Kloekhorst 2008 s.v.). We would expect a nom. *χέαρ in Greek, but it was apparantly replaced after the genitive. ToA tsar and ToB ṣar also point to a stem *ǵ^{h}es-r-, although the exact phonetic development remains unclear. The old reconstruction *ǵ^{h}er-s- has been generally abandoned.

Further forms are: Arm. jeṙn from the accus., plur. jerk' (= χεῖρες), Alb. dorë. Connection with Skt. hásta-, Av. zasta-, OP dasta- [m.] 'hand, arm' < *ǵ^{h}es-to- is likely, though the replacement of the suffix with -t- is hard to motivate.

The basic article for this word is Schindler IF 72 (1967): 244ff. On the spread of the stem χερ- from the dat.pl. χερσί < *ǵ^{h}es-r-su, see most recently Viredaz KZ 113 (2000): 290-307 (also on the Armenian forms). See also on ► ἰοχέαιρα < *-ǵ^{h}es-r-ih_2, which nicely preserves the old nominative form.

χειρόμακτρον [n.] 'towel, cloth, napkin' (Sapph., Hecat., S. and Ar. in Fr., X., Hell. pap.). ◂GR▸ •VAR Also -ώ-.
•ETYM The oldest interpretation departs from ▸χείρ and ▸μάσσω (whence μάκτρον) 'to knead, treat with the hands' (cf. ἀπο-, ἐκ-μάσσω 'to strip off, wipe off'). In this case, however, the incidental occurrence of -ω- (Hdt. v.l., Hell. pap.) beside the much more ususal -ο-, remains unclear. Hoffmann 1898: 365 therefore proposed *χειρ(ο)-ώμαρκτρον (with dissimilation), with a second member connected with ▸ὀμόργνυμι 'to wipe'; for the zero grade, he refers to ὄμαρξον· ἀπόμαξον (H.). This is the more likely solution.

χείρων [compar.] 'worse, weaker' (IA, Il.). ◂?▸
•VAR Aeol. (gramm.) χέρρων, poet. also χειρότερος (Ο 513, Υ 436, Hes. Op. 127, etc.), superl. χείριστος (Att.).
•DER Epic forms χερείων, χερειότερος; χέρεια [acc.pl.n., acc.sg.m.], χέρηες [nom.pl.], χέρηϊ [dat.sg.].
•ETYM In order to explain the forms, Leumann Mus. Helv. 2 (1945): 2ff. assumes that a superlative *χέρ-ιστος was built to χείρων < *χέρ-jων, replacing zero grade *χάριστος after μέζον < *μέγ-jων to μέγιστος. Att. χείριστος was then reshaped after χείρων, to which χειρίων· ἐλάττων, χείρων (H.) was formed. χερείων was formed beside *χέριστος after the model ἄριστος : ἀρείων, with a ntr. χέρειον, to which the plur. χέρεια after the o-stems; to this, finally, the m./f. *χέρει-ες (written χέρη-ες, see Schwyzer: 243), with a dat.sg. χέρη-ϊ, acc. χέρει-α.
No convincing etymology. Earlier attempts fail: the connection with Skt. hrasvá-, compar. hrásiyas- 'short, small', OIr. gerr 'short' because Gr. χερ- cannot be explained, and the proposal by Machek Listy filol. 72 (1948): 74f. (to OCS gorjii 'worse', which is usually connected with gorěti 'to burn', gorъkъ 'bitter') is formally not evident in view of the Slavic o-grade.

Extensively on χελιδών and its derivatives Thompson 1895 s.v.
•ETYM The woman's name Χελιδϝον (IG 9²(1), 86: 1 [Thermos VI[a]], of Corinthian origin) for Χελιδϝονι[ς (?, see Sommer 1948: 146³) would point to a suffix -ϝον-. This would be the only occurrence of this suffix in post-consonantal position in alphabetic Greek (but cf. Myc. te-mi-dwe-te, -ta). It is preferable, therefore, to take -ϝ- as a false archaism, like in Τλασίαϝο instead of -αο (cf. Fraenkel Phil. 97 (1948): 161).
Otherwise, the formation is unclear too: χελῑδ- reminds of ψηφῖδ-, κνημῖδ-, but further connection with a root *g^h*el-* in reduplicated ▸κίχλη and the Germanic group of OHG gellan 'to sound, cry', MHG glīen 'to cry' is hardly credible.
On the other hand, a suffix -ῑδ- is unproblematic in Pre-Greek. Fur.: 272, 355 assumes Mediterranean origin (also for Lat. hirundō).

Fur.: 140 connects χελλαρίης with καλλαρίας, γαλαρίας (H.) and γαλλερίας, γελαρίης (Dorio and Euthydem. apud Ath. 7, 315f.). The variation shows that these words are Pre-Greek, and the same must hold for χελλών, then.

χέλειον [n.] 'tortoise shell' (Nic., H.), χελεύς· κιθάρα (H.).

With a different stem χελώνη [f.] 'tortoise (shell)' (h. Merc.+), metaph. of many tortoise-like objects, especially a wooden shield cover of siege-troops, Lat. testūdō (X., Plb., etc.). As a first member in Χελωνο-φάγοι [m.pl.] EN (Str., D. S., Plin.), also = ἀετοί τινες (H.).

Thence 1. χελών-ιον [n.] 'tortoise shell' (Arist.), often metaph., e.g. 'cover of a lock which is shaped like a tortoise shell' (Delos III[a], pap.), see Mayser 1906-1938, I: 3: 43; diminutive -άριον [n.] (Hero, Peripl. M. Rubr.). 2. χελων-ίς, -ίδος [f.] 'lyre, footstool, threshold' (Poseid., LXX, S. E.). 3. χελων-ία, -ῖτις [f.] name of a stone (Plin.), -ίτης (κόλπος), -ῖτις (νῆσος, etc.) as a geographical name (Redard 1949: 122, 125, 160, 178). 4. -ινος 'made of tortoise shell' (Edict. Diocl.).

•ETYM χέλῡς is at the basis of χελύνη < *-us-no- 'ptng. to the χ.' and χέλειον < *χέλεϝιον (like γένειον to γένυς). With a change of suffix, we also find χελίσκον, -ίσκιον.

χέλυς is usually identified with a Slavic word for 'tortoise': CS žely, Ru. žolv', etc. < PSl. želū*- < IE gʰeluH*- or gʰelH-u*-. The connection with the word for 'green, yellow' in Lat. helvus, Greek ►χλόη, etc. from a root ǵʰelh₃*- seems possible, but is rejected e.g. by Schmeja IF 68 (1963): 40f.

Traditionally, χελώνη is connected to χέλυς under an analysis χελω[υ]-νᾱ, where the long diphthong loses its second element. This would presuppose that suffixal -νη was added to an old nominative gʰel-ōu. It is more probable that χελώνη reflects an old interchange of suffixes -u- and -n- (e.g. Lat. grūs beside γέρανος, Lat. corvus next to κορώνη). It would be conceivable that the -ω- has to do with the root-final h₃* of ǵʰelh₃*-, but the details remain unclear.

Another option (Mastrelli apud Frisk) is that χελώνη derives from the sharp sides of the jaw of tortoises, and that it is connected with the word for 'lip, jaw' in ►χεῖλος, ►χελύνη 1.

Finally, Fur.: 247 points out that the form χέλυμνα is real, and that it yielded *χελυϝνα > χελῡ́νη, χελύννα (with interchange μ/ϝ), like in σίγυμνος, σίγῡνος. This strongly suggests Pre-Greek origin. DELG writes that the form with -ῡν- is of a rare type; Chantraine 1933: 208 already stated that the words with -ῡν- must be interpreted as loans from a non-IE language. In spite of the similarity with the Slavic words, I think this conclusion is unavoidable for χέλυς, χελύνη and related words. The explanation of χελώνη from a long diphthong is an interpretation which has long since been given up (-ων- is a Pre-Greek suffix; see Fur.: 303[39]).

•DER χαράδρα [f.] 'dry bed of a mountain river, torrent (which dries out in summer), ravine, etc.' (Il.); also χάραδρος [m.] 'id.' (Delph., Boeot., Plu.), also HN (Th., Paus.). Derivatives: 1. χαράδρ-ιον (Str.), -ειον (Nic.) [n.] 'id.'; 2. -εών, -εῶνος [m.] 'place with many riverbeds' (Hdn.). 3. -ώδης 'full of riverbeds' (Str., Dsc.), -αῖος 'belonging to a riverbed' (APl., Nonn.), 'striated, serrated' (Nonn.), -ήεις 'id., full of riverbeds' (Nonn.). 4. χαραδρ-όομαι [v.] 'to be filled or corroded by a torrent, form a torrent, cleave' (Hdt., Hp., Plb., Str.), also with ἐκ-. 5. χαραδριός [m.] name of a bird, perhaps 'plover' (IA), acc. to Arist. because it lives in χαράδραι, probably folk etymology? More in Thompson 1895 s.v.; formation like ἐρῳδιός, αἰγυπιός, etc.
•ETYM As is shown by the Heraclean gen. χαράδεος (probably reshaped after χαράδρα), the neuter χέραδος is old. The feminine χεράς, which was already (re)constructed in antiquity from the ambiguous form χεραδος (either χέραδος [acc.sg.n.] or χεράδος [gen.sg.f.]), is found beside χέραδος in H., EM, etc., and is supported by collective formations (Chantraine 1933: 352f.) like λιθάς, δειράς; for further discussion Leumann 1950: 161f.
The pair χέραδος : χαράδρα (rather not with vowel assimilation) reminds of ἕδος : ἕδρα, ἔχθος : ἔχθρα, etc. For the formation, cf. also πέτρα, τάφρη, etc.
The older connection with ►χαράσσω must be given up. There is no convincing alternative etymology. Since the variation between χεραδ- and χαραδ- cannot be explained in IE terms, the word is probably Pre-Greek. This is quite plausible for a geographical term. Not in Fur. See also on ►χόνδρος.

•ETYM Departing from M 433, where a spinster is mentioned, scholars have seen in χερνῆτις a compound (univerbation) of χείρ and νέω 'to spin', so properly 'spinning with the hands'; thence, χερνήτης, χερνής would have secondarily acquired the general meaning 'day labourer', and (as an adjective) 'poor, scanty'. Schwyzer RhM 77 (1928): 105^{2} explained the word as haplological for *χερ-αρν-ητ- (χερ- for χειρ- after χέρ-νιψ) 'earning with the hands' (to ►ἄρνυμαι, cf. μισθαρνέω, -ος, -ης), but this seems rather artificial.

•ETYM Old forms are the verbal adjective χυτός, which formally agrees with Skt. hutá- 'sacrificed' < IE ǵ^{h}u-tó-; other Greco-Indian isoglosses are: χεῦμα = Skt. hóman- [n.] 'sacrificial pouring, sacrifice'; χύσις = Skt. ā́-huti- 'sacrifice'. The present and aorist formations of Greek and Indo-Aryan, however, are far apart: Greek has a full grade thematic χέω, while Indic has an athematic reduplicated present juhómi. Both forms can be old.

A special problem is presented by the aorist forms ἔχευα and ἔχεα, see Kiparsky Lang. 43 (1967): 627f., Hettrich MSS 35 (1976): 47-61, and more recently Harðarson 1993a: 188 and 193-4. The question is whether they represent a sigmatic aorist or an old root aorist; I do not have a strong opinion on this matter. On the treatment of the intervocalic digamma, see Chantraine 1942: 159.

Beside these full grade active forms stand with regular zero grade the medial ἔχυτο, χύτο, χύμενος, to which ἐχύθην. From this aorist, the fut. *χέϝω arose as an original thematic subjunctive.

Beside in Indo-Aryan, the verbal root is found in ToAB käw- 'to pour', ToB 1sg. subj. act. kewu, 3sg. med. kutär. The corresponding verb in Latin as in Germanic has an enlargement in -d- (probably a present suffix: Lat. fundō 'to pour out', Go. giutan 'id.', etc. Nominal forms are found in Arm. joyl 'poured, molten, massive' < ǵ^{h}eu-lo- or ǵ^{h}ou-lo- (cf. χῦλός), Arm. jew 'form, shape' < ǵ^{h}eu-o-, Lat. futis [f.] 'watering can' (Varro). Hitt. ku-uz-za /kūts/, acc. kuttan 'wall' < 'heaped up' is a t-stem, see Schindler KZ 81 (1967): 297. Finally, there are two Thraco-Phrygian glosses: ζευμαν· τὴν πηγήν 'source'. Φρύγες (H.), would be Gr. χεῦμα, see Solmsen KZ 34 (1897): 62[1], and ζετραία· χύτρη (Poll.), perhaps from ǵ^{h}eu-tr-. Cf. ► κοχυδέω and ► χώομαι.

Adjectives -ε(ι)ος 'of the goose' (Hdt., Arist., Hell. pap.), -ώδης 'goose-like' (S. E.). 3. Verb χην-ίζω and χην-ιάζω 'to quack like a goose, cackle' (Ath., Diph.); of flute-players.
•ETYM The nom. plur. χῆνες, χᾶνες agrees nicely with Germanic and Baltic plural forms: OE gēs > MoE geese, ON gæss, Lith. dial. žą̃ses < g^{h}ans-es. The s-stem was generalized in Greek as an n-stem, with analogical nom. χήν, χάν instead of *χᾶς < *χάνς.
Other cognates include Ru. gus', OHG gans, probably also OIr. géis 'swan', and the secondary forms in Skt. haṃsá- [m.] (o-stem), fem. haṃsī, and OE gōs, ON gǫ́s < PGm. gáns-ō*, continuing an ā-stem. Lat. āns-er, -eris [m.].
Connection with χανεῖν (see ► χάσκω) and onomatopoeic origin have both been considered.
As IE had no phoneme /a/, Skt. haṃsá- must continue ǵ^{h}h$_2$en-s-, and the same form may be assumed for the other languages.

χήρ [?] · ἐχῖνος 'hedgehog' (H.). ◄IE g^{h}er- 'stick out'► •ETYM Identical with Lat. ēr, ēris [m.] 'hedgehog', which may represent hēr*, cf. ānser 'goose' for hānser*. It is assumed that the root is ǵ^{h}er- 'to be excited' seen in ► χαίρω, and that this originally meant 'to stick out, be bristly'. It probably does not belong to the root ǵ^{h}ers- 'to be stiff' found in ► χέρσος, because we do not find a trace of -s- in the present word. See also ► χοῖρος.

χήρα [f.] 'widow, woman left by her husband, vidua' (Il.). ◄IE ǵ^{h}eh$_1$-ro-► •VAR Ion. -η.
•COMP As a second member in φιλό-χηρος, -χήρα 'friend of widows' (late inscr.).

•DER 1. χῆρος 'widowed, orphaned, bereaved' (E., Call., A. R., AP, late prose), rarely as a substantive 'widower', of the male of an animal (Arist. [beside χήρα], Ath.).
2. χηροσύνη [f.] 'widowhood' (A. R., Man.). 3. χηρ-αιότης [f.] 'id.' (pap. VI^p), after γεραιότης, etc. 4. χηρ-ήϊος 'widowed, empty' (Antim.), -ειος 'id.' (AP). 5. χηρ-ικός 'belonging to a widow' (Tz.).
Verbs: 6. χηρ-εύω [v.] 'to be widowed, separated, bereaved' (ι 124, Gortyn, Att.), also with κατα-, ἐπι-; thence -ευσις [f.] 'widowhood, separateness' (Gortyn, LXX). 7. χηρ-όω [v.] 'to make widow, rob (of one's spouse), depopulate' (Il.), whence -ωσις [f.] 'robbery' (sch.). 8. χηρ-αίνω 'to become a widow' (Herod.).
See also on ► χηρωσταί.
•ETYM χήρα replaced the old word for 'widow' found in Lat. vidua, etc.; a cognate of this is retained in ► ἠΐθεος. Remote cognates may be found in χώρα < ǵ^{h}oh$_1$-reh$_2$-, and with a different suffix χῆτος, dat. χήτει (on ► χατέω see s.v.). It is assumed that the root from which all these forms derive is identical with that in the verb meaning 'to leave' in Skt. jáhāti and ► κιχᾱ́νω.

χηράμβη [f.] a kind of mussel (Archil. fr. 285 W, Sophr.) ◄PG(V)► •VAR Also χηραμύς (Xanth., Hp., Str.), s.v. ► χηραμός. See Fur.: 287.
•ETYM Fur.: 221, 287 assumes a Pre-Greek pre-form *χηραβυς in order to explain the prenasalized form.

χηραμός [f.] 'hole, cleft, slit' (epic poet. Φ 495, also Arist. and late prose). ◄PG(S,V)► •VAR Plur. also -ά [n.], dat. pl. also χηραμόνεσσι (Orph.), which seems to point to *χηραμών, but is probably only a metrical enlargement.
χηραμίς (Hp. Morb. 3, 15 and 16) and χέραβος· χάσμα γῆς (H.) are taken by Fur. 221 as mistakes for χηραμός, but could just as well be variants.
•DER χηραμο-δύτης [m.] "who nuzzles through holes" (AP), χηραμόθεν 'from a hole' (Orph.). Lexically attested by-forms: χαραμός· ἡ τῆς γῆς διάστασις, οἷον χηραμός (H.), χηλαμός (Eust.), χειραμός (EM).
Beside it χηραμύς, -ύδος [f.] 'scallop-shell', used as a measure of content (Xanth., Hp. [v.l. -μίς], Str.), χηραμύδες· τὰ κοῖλα καὶ ἔχοντα κενώματα 'hollow places, having cavities' (H.); χηράμβη [f.] 'kind of scallop' (Archil., Sophr.).
•ETYM A typical example where scholars have tried to explain away all variants, instead of asking what they may indicate. We clearly have a Pre-Greek form with several variants. Fur.: 339 suggests that χειραμός represents an earlier form *χαιραμος. The variant with -μβ- is a variant too, see Fur.: 221[6] and 287[6], recalling the variations μ/ μβ and β/ μ. Note also ρ/ λ. Further, -υδ- is known as a Pre-Greek suffix.

χηρωσταί [m.pl.] = οἱ μακρόθεν συγγενεῖς (H.), 'far-off kinsmen, who inherit from a deceased person lacking closer relatives' (E 158, Hes. Th. 607, Q. S.). ◄IE ǵ^{h}eh$_1$-ro- 'bereft'► •ETYM Formation comparable with ὠμηστής, so like this to be analyzed as a compound, extended with a suffix -της. Formally and semantically strongly reminiscent of Lat. hērēs, -ēdis, it also resembles χήρ 'widow', χῆρος 'bereaved, orphaned, etc.'. The first member in both words is IE ǵ^{h}eh$_1$-ro- > *χῆρον 'property left behind' (cf. MoHG Erbe 'property' to ►ὀρφανός, s.v.). Dunkel 1987: 91-100 showed that the second member is from *$h_1$ed- 'to eat'. This solves the problem of the -ω-: *$\acute{g}^h$e$h_1$ro-h_1d- > χηρωδ-. The ē of Latin is explained by assuming lengthened grade -h_1ēd- in the second member, which may have been reintroduced at a later stage or not.

χθές [adv.] 'yesterday' (h. Merc.). ◄IE *$d^h\acute{g}^h$ies- 'yesterday'► •VAR Also ἐ-χθές (Ar., Hell.).
•DER χθιζός 'of yesterday' (Hom.), to which the adverb χθιζ-όν (T 195), -ά (B 303); explanation see below. Several formations in -ινός (περυσινός, etc.): χθεσ-ινός (Luc.), ἐχθεσ-ινός (AP), χθιζ-ινός (Ar. [lyr.] conj., Gal., Alciphr.), ἐχθιζ-ινός (Men.).
•ETYM Old expression of time for 'yesterday', retained in:
1. Lat. heri, Alb. dje < IE *$\acute{g}^h$es(i), ON í gær, OSw. ī gār < *$\acute{g}^h$ēs, where i is a preposition; with a suffix -ter- in Lat. hes-ternus, Gm. gester-*, e.g. in OHG gestaron 'yesterday'.
2. Skt. hyás < *$\acute{g}^h$ies. The gloss σερός· χθές. Ἠλεῖοι (H.) can also be explained from the same basis (with Elean rhotacism, and -ός after νυκτός).
3. χθές with the same initial as in ►χθών; here probably also belong Celtic forms like OIr. in-dé, MW (d)doe < PCl. gd(i)i̯es* (with loss of the g-).
Derivation from *d^ho$\acute{g}^h$o- 'day' (Puhvel 1987a: 316-318) directly explains the initial reflexes. Puhvel assumes a comparative suffix, with -i̯es as an endingless locative and -is- as a zero grade; in this way, the forms with and without -i̯- are also explained. The comparative suffix gives an original meaning 'the day which is the other day in relation to now'. The anlauting ἐ- in ἐ-χθές may be the same deictic particle as in ἐ-κεῖνος. χθιζά may be from *χθισ-δα (Pisani) with δ-suffix as in κρύβ-δα, etc.; Puhvel l.c. n. 11.

χθών, χθονός [f.] 'earth, ground, land' (almost only epic poet. since Il.). ◄IE *$d^h\acute{g}^h$em- 'earth'► •COMP Rarely as a first member, e.g. χθονο-τρεφής 'bred by the earth' (A.). Often as a second member, e.g. αὐτό-χθων 'possessing one's own ground, living on proper ground, indigenous', mostly plur. 'aboriginals' (of the population of Attica, etc.), secondarily 'produced by the earth' (IA); besides αὐτό-χθονος 'together with the land' (A. Ag. 536); αὐτόχθων and -ονος are treated extensively by Sommer 1948: 83ff.
•DER 1. χθόν-ιος 'belonging to the earth, the ground, the underworld; indigenous' (epic poet. Hes., also late prose); often in hypostases, e.g. ἐπιχθόν-ιος 'living on the earth, earthly' (epic poet. Il.); on ►Ἐριχθόνιος s.v. 2. χθόνεια [n.pl.] 'festival for worshipping the χθόνιοι θεοί' (Argolis). 3. χθονήρεις· χθονίους (H.), uncertain χθόϊνος = γήϊνος (H.). 4. With ablaut and retained -μ-: χθαμ-αλός 'low' (N 683), with -αλότης [f.] 'lowness' (late), -αλόω [v.] 'to lower, make level' (J.).
•ETYM Old word for 'earth', retained in most daughter languages: Hitt. tēkan, gen. taknaš, ToA tkaṃ, ToB keṃ, Skt. kṣā́ḥ, gen. jmáḥ, Av. zā̊, gen. zəmō, Alb. dhe, Lat. humus, OIr. dū, acc. don, Lith. žẽmė, Ru. zemljá. Typical derivations are found in Germanic, e.g. Go. guma 'man', Lat. homō, NPhr. ζεμελως, which is a formation like χθαμαλός and Lat. humilis. The Anatolian TN Γδαμ-μαυα is better left out of the discussion.
As a basis, we find an m-stem *d^he$\acute{g}^h$-m- > Hitt. tekan, to which a zero grade stem *$d^h\acute{g}^h$om- > ToA tkaṃ was formed. The initial d^h was lost in Lat. humus, Gr. χαμαί, etc. In Greek, $d^h\acute{g}^h$- became χθ- through metathesis, and final -μ regularly became -ν, which subsequently spread in the inflexion. The -m- was retained only in the zero grade forms χθαμαλός and ►χαμαί. The root may also be seen in ►αὐχμός 'drought' and νεοχμός 'new'. Further details on the morphology and phonetic development in Schindler Sprache 13 (1967): 191ff.

•ETYM An emphasizing particle, like Skt. hí, Av. zī, also encl. in kár-hi 'when?', tár-hi 'then', from IE *$\acute{g}^h$i.

χῖδρον [n.] 'dish of fresh barley-corns or other crops' (Alcm., Ar., LXX, Hell. pap.). ◄PG(V)►
•DER χιδρίας πυρός 'unripe wheat' (Ar. Fr. 889), χιδροπώλης 'dealer in χ.' (Poll. 7, 199); χιδροβρόχον 'vessel for soaking χ.', Kafizin 219 (223/222 BC).
•ETYM Acc. to sch. Ar. Pax 595, ἔδεσμα περὶ Καρίαν. Unsuccessful attempt to connect the word with κριθή by Pisani RILomb. 77 (1943-44): 565f. The variation κ/χ shows that the word is Pre-Greek (Fur.: 135f.).

•ETYM Probably a rude term, the meaning of which is not given. It could belong to sexual language, compare χίδαλον· ἀντὶ τοῦ <κίδαλον>· τὸ αἰδοῖον (H.), and χίδαδον [leg. χίδαλον]· τὸ παιδίον (H.). The connection with κίδαλόν 'onion' is popular. Difficult to judge is χιδά· φρικτή; see DELG. The word will be Pre-Greek.

•VAR Ion. (inscr.) χείλιοι, Aeol. χέλλιοι, Lac. χήλιοι.
•COMP As a first member in χιλιό-ναυς 'consisting of a thousand ships' (E., Str.), also -ναύτης, Dor. -ναύτας 'id.' (A. [anap.], E. [lyr.]), χιλιόμ-βη [f.] 'sacrifice of a thousand oxen' (Jul.), after ἑκατόμβη. As a second member also -χιλοι in ἐννεά-, δεκά-χ(ε)ιλοι 'nine thousand, ten thousand' (E 860, Ξ 148), after this δίσ-χιλοι (Att. epigr. V^a), a backformation like -βιβλος to ►βιβλίον.
•DER 1. χιλιοστός 'thousandth' (Att.), -όομαι [v.] 'to be convicted to a penalty of a thousand drachmae' (Lycurg.); 2. χιλιάς, -άδος [f.] 'number of a thousand' (IA), -αστύς (Ephesus, Samos, Cos), also -οστύς (X.), Aeol. χελλησ-τύς (Methymna) [f.] 'division or troop of a thousand men' (details on the formation in Fraenkel 1910: 202f., Schwyzer: 593 and 597); thence -αστήρ [m.] 'member of a χιλιαστύς' (Samos), see Fraenkel l.c., Benveniste 1948: 74. χιλιάζω [v.] 'to be a thousand years old' (Tz.).

•ETYM The dialectal forms χείλιοι, χέλλιοι, χήλιοι clearly point to a pre-form *χέσλιοι, which is cognate with Skt. sahásra-, Av. hazaŋra- [n.] 'thousand'. A pre-form IE *ǵ^{h}eslo- can be reconstructed, but the original concrete meaning of it remains unknown ('heap' vel sim.?). Usually, Att. χῑ́λιοι is thought to have arisen by assimilation, and it also intruded into the text of Homer (see Wackernagel 1916: 7). Skt. sa- and Av. ha- continue the zero grade of IE sem* 'one' (see ►εἷς). It is usually assumed that Lat. mīlle should be connected too, from smih$_2$ ǵ^{h}eslih$_2$*.

•VAR Also -ή [f.] 'id.' (Gal., Suid.).
•COMP As a first member in χιλή-γονος 'grown as fodder' (Nic.), as a second member in βού-χιλος 'feeding oxen' (A. [lyr.], AP).
•DER 1. χιλ-όω [v.] 'to feed, lead onto the meadow' (X.), -οῦσθαι· παχύνεσθαι, σιτίζεσθαι 'to fatten, be fed' (H.), with -ωμα [n.] 'fodder' (Agatharch.), -ωτήρ [m.] 'fodder-bag' (pap., Poll., H.); 2. -εύω 'id.', also intr. 'to pasture' (Thphr., Nic.).
•ETYM Unexplained. Machek 1958: 54f. compared Cz. žir 'fodder', Ru. žir 'fat, lard'. Other explanations of the Slav. word are found in Vasmer 1953 s.v.

χίμαιρα [f.] 'goat', also as a designation of a mythical monster (Il.). ◂IE *ǵ^{h}ei-m- 'winter, snow'▸ •COMP As a first member in χιμαιρο-φόνος 'killing goats' (AP). Hence χιμαιρ-άς [f.] 'id.' (Del.^{3} 644, 16 [IV-III^a]), beside ἀρνηάς (cf. Fraenkel 1910: 95), also -ίς [f.] 'kid' (Alciphr.), -ειος 'belonging to a goat' (Hdn.).
•DER χίμαρος [m.] 'he-goat', also [f.] 'goat' (Ar., Hell.); χιμαρο-κτόνος = χιμαιρο-φόνος (Opp.); χιμάρα [f.] 'id.' (AP).
•ETYM Formation with a suffix -ια- (cf. πρῷρα, νείαιρα) which reminds of MoSw. and MoNw. dial. gimmer, gimber, ON gymbr [f.] 'sheep that has not yet dropped a lamb' < PGm. gimbrī*. The proper meaning is 'a one year old animal', cf. χίμαροι· αἶγες χειμέριαι (H.), and χίμαιρα· ἡ ἐν χειμῶνι τεχθεῖσα, οἷον ἕνα χειμῶνα ἔχουσα (EM 811, 53), see also on ►ἔταλον. If the Germanic forms are cognate, they are probably independent innovations.
The age of the much later attested χίμαρος (replacing ►τράγος, s.v.) is uncertain; probably it is an innovation to χίμαιρα like πιερός to πίειρα; cf. also ἕταρος beside ἕταιρα.
It was derived from an r-stem, which is also seen in Arm. jmeṙn 'winter' < *ǵ^{h}imer-, and within Greek with full grade in χειμέρ-ιος, -ινός. This r-stem alternates with the n-stem in χειμών, χεῖμα.

χίμετλον ⇒ χεῖμα.

χῑράς, -άδος [f.] 'chap, crack' (D. L., Suid., Eust.). ◂PG?▸
•VAR Also χειράς; plur. also χ(ε)ῖραι = αἱ ἐν ταῖς πτέρναις (H.), τοῖς ποσὶ ῥαγάδες (EM 810, 27).
•COMP As a first member in χιρο-πόδᾱς [m.] (Alc.; cod. χειροπόδης); also -πους, plur. -ποδες 'with chapped feet' (Poll., H., EM).

•DER χιρ-αλέος (medic. pap.), -αλέους· τοὺς πόδας κατειργασμένους (H.), cf. ῥωγαλέος; χίραμα [n.] designation of a foot-disease of horses (Hippiatr.). Formation like λιθάς, σπιλάς, etc.
•ETYM The connection with the Germanic group of MoNw. gir [m.] 'desire, passion', OHG gīri 'desirous', also gīr 'vulture', is highly doubtful. Semantically close within Greek are χηραμός, χηλή, but an ablaut IE *ǵ^{h}ē(i)- : ǵ^{h}i- cannot be assumed anymore; this means that these words cannot be related. χηραμός is probably Pre-Greek; the same may hold for this word, in view of the suffix -αδ- and the meaning.

χιτών, -ῶνος [m.] 'chiton', designation of a garment without sleeves, which was worn directly on the body, 'body-garment, shirt' (Il.); extensively on the mg. Trümpy 1950: 13f., E. Masson 1967: 27ff. ◂PG?▸

•DER Hypostasis Myc. E-pi-ki-to-ni-ja = ἐπι-χιτών-ια [n.pl.] "that which is worn over the chiton", designation of upper garments. Diminutives: χιτώνιον [n.] (Ar., Att. inscr., Hell. pap.), -άριον [n.] (Hell. and late), -ίσκος [m.] (Att.), -ίσκιον [n.] (Att. inscr.), -ισκάριον [n.] (Eust.). Further -ία [f.] mg. unclear (Melamp.), Scheller 1951: 54. Also Χιτώνη (Call.), -έα or -ία (Epich., Ath.), Κιθώνη (Milete), name of Artemis as a huntress.
•ETYM Acc. to E. Masson l.c., a Semitic loan word, first from Phoen. ktn 'linen garment'. On the different forms: χιτών, with metathesis κιθών, through contamination κιτών and χιθών, see Schulze 1933a: 386; Wackernagel 1916: 23 and Kretschmer Glotta 26 (1938): 43. From Sem. also Lat. tunica (see WH s.v.). Acc. to Fur.: 136, we are rather dealing with an Anatolian culture-word. Could it be Pre-Greek, given the variants?

•VAR A hypothetical aor. beside the perf. κέχλᾱδα (Pi.), a form which is found as κεχληδέναι· ψοφεῖν, προσλαλεῖν 'to make noise, talk with' (H.).
•ETYM The formation may be compared with κέκρᾱγα : κρᾰγεῖν, κέκρῑγα : κρῐγεῖν, λέληκα : λακεῖν. A present *χλάδω (LSJ) cannot be accounted for; it would rather be *χλάζω (Thes., Pape), like κράζω, κρίζω beside ►καχλάζω.

χλαῖνα [f.] 'upper-garment, mantle', originally worn only by men (Il.). ◂PG(S,V)▸ •VAR Also κλανίσκιον inscr. Athens (Fur.: 136).
•COMP μελάγ-χλαινος 'with a black χ.' (Mosch.), also a people north of the Scythians (Hdt.).
•DER χλαιν-ίον [n.] (AP); denominative -ῶσαι, -όω [v.] 'to cover with a mantle' (Nonn., AP), also with ἀνα-, δια-, κατα-; thence -ωμα [n.] 'cloak', of the skin of a lion (APl.), -ίζω 'id.', -ιστής [m.] (Hdn.).
Further χλανίς, -ίδος [f.] 'light upper-garment', worn both by men and women (IA). Compound χλανιδο-ποιός [m.] 'manufacturer of χ.' (Poll.), -ποιία [f.] (X.). Thence χλαν-ίδιον [n.] (Hdt., E.), -ιδίσκα [f.] (Tanagra III^a), -ιδίσκιον [n.] (Aristaenet.); also -ίσκιον [n.] (Ar., Aeschin. et al.), haplological; -ισκίδιον (Ar.). Also χλάνδιον [n.] (Samos, Teos).

A third formation is χλαμύς, gen. -ύδος, accus. -υν (Sapph.) [f.] 'upper-garment for men, especially for traveling or for battle' (Ar., X., Hell.). Compound χλαμυδ-ουργός [m.] 'manufacturer of χ.' (Poll.), -ουργία [f.] (X.). Diminutive χλαμύδιον [n.] (Hell.), -υδίσκα [f.] (Tanagra III[a]), verb κεχλαμυδωμένος 'dressed in a χ.' (Nicostr.).

•ETYM For χλαῖνα < *χλάν-ι̯ᾰ and χλανίς, a common base form may be assumed. Fraenkel 1912: 178[2] attempted to derive them from a common form χλαμ-, together with χλαμύς. Fur.: 338 connects χλαμύς with χλαῖνα as Pre-Greek, which is convincing given the meanings. Also related are χλανίαι· περιβολαί, for the same reason. χλανίτιδες 'necklace' is rather a different word.

Fur.: 220 connects χλαμυρίς with χλαβόν· εὐτραφές. The group of χλαῖνα, χλανίς and χλαμύς is no doubt Pre-Greek, given the suffix -υδ-, and the interchange ν/μ (see Fur.: 388). Add to these κλανίσκιον (see above).

From χλαῖνα was borrowed Lat. laena via foreign (Etruscan?) mediation.

•ETYM Unclear. Persson 1912(2): 791[3] hesitatingly compared it with ON glóra 'to sparkle', etc.; see also on ►χλόη. A gloss χλάρ· κόχλαξ (H.) = κάχληξ 'pebble' reminds of Lat. glārea 'id.', and this is probably not accidental. Alessio Studi etruschi 18 (1941): 132 thinks it is a Mediterranian word.

χλεμερόν [adj.] · χλιαρόν, θερμόν 'warm, hot'; χλεμύρα· χλοανθοῦντα 'verdant' (H.). ◂PG▸

•ETYM Persson 1891: 94 and Persson 1912(1): 15 compares Lith. želmuõ 'shoot of a plant', to žélti 'to become green, flourish', with further connection to the group of ►χλόη. This is difficult because the root is probably *$\acute{g}^h elh_3$-. The word seems Pre-Greek: for the suffix cf. ►διφθέρα.

χλευδόν · χύδην, σωρηδόν, πληθοῦντα 'unordered, in heaps, full' (H.). ⇒ χλῆδος.

χλεύη [f.] 'joke, jest, mock, scoff' (h. Cer. 202, Lyr. [IV[a]], Ph., Luc.). ◂IE *g^h*leu-* 'be merry, joke'▸ •DER More usual χλευ-άζω [v.] 'to jest, mock, taunt' (Ar., D., Arist., Hell.), also with δια-, ἐκ-, κατα-, etc., probably denominative; thence -ασμός [m.] (D., Arist., Hell.), -ασμα [n.] (LXX, sch.), -ασία [f.] (D., Arist., D. Adjective χλιαρός, -ερός (Schwyzer: 482), -ηρῶς (Hp.) 'lukewarm' (Alcm., Epich., Hdt., com., Arist., etc.), -αρότης [f.] (Procl.).

With δ-enlargement: χλῐδή [f.] 'effeminacy, luxury, haughtiness' (Hdt., trag., Pl. Smp. 197d, X. Cyr. 4, 5, 54), also χλίδος [n.] 'luxurious ornament' (Ion Trag. 3), χλίδ-ων, -ωνος [m.] (accented acc. to Hdn. 2, 729, 18) 'bracelet, necklace, anklet' (Asios VII-VI[a], Ar. Fr. 320, 11, Att. inscr. IV[a], Hell.), χλῐδανός (Aeol. χλίδ-) 'copious, voluptuous' (Sapph., A. [anap.], E. [troch.], Posidon., Arr.), whence -ημα [n.] = χλίδος (E. IA 74). Further some seemingly primary forms: κεχλιδότα· ἀνθοῦντα 'flowering' (H.), διακεχλιδώς = θρυπτόμενος (Archipp.); with full grade: διακεχλοιδώς· διαρρέων ὑπὸ τρυφῆς 'wasting away in luxury', διακεχλοιδέναι· θρύπτεσθαι 'to be effeminate, etc.' (H.). Thus also χλοιδᾶν· διέλκεσθαι καὶ τρυφᾶν, χλοιδῶσι· θρύπτονται, χλοιδέσκουσαι· γαστρίζουσαι (H.), on the formation see Schwyzer: 708.

The rare forms χλίω and χλιδή, in the metaphorical sense 'soft, luxuriant, etc.', seem to be primary.

Some Celtic and Germanic words with the meaning 'to shine, etc.' are compared: OIr. glé 'clear, evident', MW gloew 'liquid, clear' < QIE $\acute{g}^hloiuo$-*, also ON gljá 'to shine, gleam', MHG glīmen 'to lighten up, gleam', Lith. žlejà 'darkness, twilight, dusk' (extensively on this Fraenkel 1955 s.v.). These words point to a root *$g^hlei$-.
χλιδή, on the other hand, would correspond to Go. glitmunjan 'to gleam', ON glita 'to glitter', etc. The semantic connection between 'shine, gleam' and 'warm' is difficult, so the reconstruction remains uncertain.

Further χλόος (Hell. poetry), χλοῦς (Hp. apud Gal.) [m.] 'light green, green-yellow color, pallor', χλο-ώδης 'color of grass, green-yellow, pale' (Hp., Pl., Thphr.), χλοιόομαι (also ἐκ-) [v.] 'to become green-yellow or pale' (Hp., Gal.).
On itself stands, with other formation, χλωρός 'bright green, pale green, green-yellow, yellowish, pale', also 'fresh, lively' (Il.). Compounds, e.g. χλωρο-φάγος 'eating green fodder' (Hp.), -φαγέω [v.] (Hippiatr.), μελί-χλωρος 'honey-yellow' (Pl., Arist.).
Hence 1. χλωρ-ότης [f.] 'bright green color, paleness' (LXX, Plu.). 2. -ῖτις λίθος 'bright green stone' (Plin.), see Redard 1949: 63. 3. χλωρ-αίνομαι [v.] 'to turn pale' (S. Fr. 1114, Gal.), -ασμα [n.] 'becoming pale' (Hp.). 4. χλωρ-ίζω 'to become green or pale' (LXX). 5. χλωρ-άζω [v.] 'to eat green fodder' (Gal.). 6. χλωρ-ιάω [v.] 'to become pale, turn pale' (Hp., Longos), -ίασις (H. s.v. χλόος). 7. χλωρ-ική epithet of the ἀρτεμισία (*PMag. Χλῶρις, -ιν pet name (λ 281).
•ETYM The writing χλοίη, χλοιόομαι, which is probably Ionic, may have been caused by the synonyms ποίη, ποία (which is πόα in Attic); cf. cases like χνοίη beside ►χνόη, ὀλοιός beside ►ὀλοός.
The Greek words for vegetation belong to a group of words which is represented in Baltic, Slavic and Latin in the same meaning: Lith. žélti, 1sg. želiù 'to green, sprout', želmuõ 'plant, shoot, growth' < $\acute{g}^helH$-mōn*, žãlias 'green, raw, uncooked', žolẽ 'grass, herb, flower' < *$g^h$ōl-, etc.; in Slavic e.g. OCS zelenъ 'χλωρός, πράσινος', Ru. zelënyj 'green', etc.; Lat. helus, (h)olus, -eris [n.] 'green plants, vegetables, cabbage'. In Indo-Iranian, Skt. hari- 'fallow, greenish' and Av. zairi- 'yellow' < $\acute{g}^he/olH$-i-* are related.

From other languages, ζέλκια· λάχανα. Φρύγες (H.) and Oss. zældæ 'low grass' may be mentioned.
From χλωρός, which must derive from zero grade $\acute{g}^hlh_3$-ró-*, it becomes clear that the root was $\acute{g}^helh_3$-*. It is unclear, however, how χλόη and χλόος (with short -ο-) can be derived from this root, as they point to *χλόϝη, *χλόϝος. The pair *πλόϝος to πλώω has been compared, but there we have evidence for two roots pleu- and *$pleh_3$-.
The comparison of χλωρός with Icel. glóra 'to sparkle, gaze at', glór-eygðr, glór-ögd 'with sparkling eyes' is semantically not strong. Interesting is the identification of χλωρός with ►γλουρός · χρυσός, γλούρεα· χρύσεα. Φρύγες (H.).
Other relatives are expressions for 'bile' and 'yellow', see ►χολή.

χλούνης [m.] epithet of the wild boar (I 539, Hes. Sc. 168, 177, Call. Dian. 150), 'boar' (Nic. Fr. 74, 6, Opp. H. 1, 72), mg. unclear (A. Fr. 62 = 74 M., Hippon. 61 = 29 Masson). The meaning was already debated in antiquity: 'cut up, castrated, τομίας'; 'living solitarily, μονιός'; 'foaming, ἀφρίζων'; 'resting in the grass, ὁ ἐν τῇ χλόῃ εὐναζόμενος'; 'wrong-doer, robber, κακοῦργος, λωποδύτης'. ◄?►

•ETYM The word has no etymology, and the case is worsened by the unclear meaning. For χλουνός = χρυσός, connection with χλόη, χλωρός is probable.

Prellwitz, however, reconstructed *χλωρ-ηϝιδ-ς 'brightly singing', a compound of χλωρός and the zero grade of ἀείδω with compositional lengthening. The same analysis by Duerbeck MSS 24 (1968): 15ff. (with extensive treatment), but in the sense of 'singing in the fresh leaves'.

•ETYM Starting from a meaning 'to plane, scratch, gnaw off', χνόος and χνόη may be understood as action nouns 'what is planed or gnawed off', and 'place of planing off (of the axle)'. It is tempting to connect the popular words ►χναύω and χνίω.
Reasonable connections can then be found in Germanic and Slavic: ON gnúa 'to rub', OE gnēað < PGm. gnauða-* 'niggardly', Ru. gnus 'rabble, vermin', Pol. gnus 'sluggerd', OCS gnusъnъ 'μιαρός'; DELG speaks of 'rather loose' connections. •ETYM The inherited word for 'pig', σῦς or ὗς, gradually extinguished and was replaced by γρῦλος, γρύλλος and χοῖρος. The latter probably represents *χορ-ι̯ος, and in this case may be cognate with Alb. derr < $ǵ^h$oiro- 'swine'. Since wild pigs are brushed, it may also be related to ►χήρ 'hedgehog', which is related to Lat. ēr. In view of the limited distribution, we may wonder whether this etymon is a substrate word.
The other etymology by Lidén Annales Academiae Scientiarum Fennicae B. 27 (1931): 117ff., that χοῖρος would be identical with Arm. gēr , gen.pl. girac' 'fat (of men and animals)' (which may derive from IE g^hoiro-*) and related to Ru. žir 'fat, bacon, wealth', is not very convincing.

•ETYM A Slavic word for 'stomach' shows remarkable similarity with χολάδες: Ru. želúdok, CS želudъkъ, Pol. żołądek, which may be reconstructed as IE g^hel-ond-. The formation is similar to that of χολάδες, if this derives from g^hol-nd-, but not identical. Lith. skilándis 'sausage-stomach, etc.' is considered unrelated, but shows the same suffix.
There are a number of problems with this account: first, the deviating form χόλικες remains unexplained (it is difficult to arrive at this form from k^holn̥d-*). Second, Fur.: 140 compares not only κόλον, but also καλίδια· ἔντερα. Κύπριοι 'intestines (Cypr.)' (H.) and (ibid.: 345) γόλα· ἔντερα. Μακεδόνες (H.), γάλλια· ἔντερα (H.), γάλλος (H.); he also adduces Arm. k'alird 'intestestines of animals. The variations show that the word is Pre-Greek.

3. Denominative χολάω [v.] 'to be full of gall, rage, be wrathful' (Hp., com., LXX), also with ἐκ-, ὑπερ-; χολαίνω [v.] 'id.' (Aesop., v.l.), ἐκ-χολίζω [v.] 'to remove the gall' (Gp., v.l.).

Also χόλος [m.] 'bitter hate, wrath' (Il., epic poet., also Hdt. and late prose), rarely 'gall' (P 203). Thence χολ-ωτός 'wrathful' (Hom.), see Ammann 1956: 21f., -ιος 'wrathful' (AP).

To χολωτός belongs a series of verbal forms: χολω-θῆναι, -σασθαι. -σομαι, κεχόλωμαι, -μένος, -σομαι, pres. χολοῦμαι 'to become wrathful, be wrathful, grumble'; also act. χολῶ-σαι, -σέμεν 'to make wrathful' (Hom., Hes., Pi., trag.); see Wackernagel 1916: 130, Chantraine 1942: 364.

A primary verb, which may be preserved in Lith. žélti 'to sprout', originally referred to the green-yellow color of germinating and sprouting vegetation, cf. OHG gruoni 'green' to gruoen 'to germinate', and Lat. vīridis to vīreō. This verb could also be used of other objects that were characterized by a comparable color, e.g. gall: Av. zāra- [m.], ON gall [n.] 'gall, poison', OHG galla [f.] < PGm. galla-, gallō(n)- < IE ǵ^{h}olH-n-*, OCS zlъčь < ǵ^{h}lh$_3$-ti-* (the appurtenance of Lat. fel, fellis [n.] 'id.' with f- < ǵ^h-* presupposes that it is a dialectal form).

A color adjective 'green, yellow, etc.', is found in several variants, e.g. Skt. hári- = Av. zairi- < IE ǵ^{h}eli-* or ǵ^{h}olH-i-*, Lat. helvus 'honey-yellow' < ǵ^{h}elH-i-uo-* (see De Vaan 2008 s.v.), Lith. žel̃vas 'greenish, yellowish' < ǵ^{h}el-uo-*, OHG gelo 'yellow' < PGm. gelwa-* << IE ǵ^{h}elH-u-*), ON gulr 'id.' < PGm. gula-* < IE ǵ^{h}lH-o-*, etc.

•ETYM Frisk comments that it is probably from χοῦς, χέω, comparing ►χόανος, ►χῶνος. Unclear.

χορδή [f.] 'gut, catgut, string, sausage' (since φ 407). ◂IE *ǵ^{h}orH- 'intestine'▸

•COMP As a first member in χορδ-αψός [m.] 'ileus, volvulus' vel sim. (medic.); on connection with ἅπτω see extensively Strömberg 1944: 100f. Often as a second member, e.g. ἑπτά-χορδος 'with seven strings' (Arist.).

•DER Diminutives χορδ-ίον [n.] (Milete V-IV[a]), -άριον [n.] (Alex. [lyr.]); further -εύω [v.] 'to make sausages', -ευμα [n.] 'sausage-dish' (Ar.), κατα-χορδεύω 'to chop to sausage-meat, cut up, slit' (Hdt., Them.), -έω 'id.' (Ael.).

•ETYM Derived from an Indo-European term for 'intestine', but without an exact correspondence. A formation in -n- is found in Lith. žárna (žarnà) [f.] '(small) guts, leather bag, hose', plur. žárnos 'intestines', ON gǫrn 'id.', plur. garnar 'intestines' < IE ǵ^{h}orH-nh$_2$-*, OHG garn [n.] 'yarn' (made of dried gut). Without -n-, we find Lat. haru-spex 'diviner, soothsayer' < ǵ^{h}rH-u-*, Skt. hírā- [m.] 'band', hirā́ [f.] 'vein' < ǵ^{h}rH-o-*.

Given the frequent forms with -n-, it has been proposed that χορδή is an irregular development from *χορνή (e.g. Haas 1956: 131f.); the -δ- would have been taken over from a semantically close word, e.g. from the group of καρδία (the reverse may have happened to Skt. hŕ̥daya- 'heart' with h- < ǵ^h- instead of ś-* < ḱ- after the word for 'gut'.

The appurtenance of Lat. hernia [f.] 'rupture' and Alb. zorrë 'gut', plur. 'guts, intestines' is doubtful because of the reflex of the initial stop.

χόριον [n.] 'skin enclosing the foetus, afterbirth' (Hp., Arist., Thphr., Dsc.), 'membrane inside an egg' (Arist.), mg. unclear in Theoc. 10, 11; plur. -ια 'dish filled with milk and honey, a kind of pudding' (com., Theoc.). ◂?▸

•COMP Numerous compounds, e.g. χοροι-τύπος 'stamping at the round dance (at the dancing-place?), dancing, dancer' (Pi. Fr. 156, Opp., Nonn.), probably also h. Merc. 31 (of tortoises; see Porzig 1942: 210); others accentuate χοροί-τυπος (see Zumbach 1955: 40); thence -τυπίη [f.] '(stamping at the) round dance' (Ω 261, AP), -τυπέω [v.] 'to stamp the floor at the round dance, to dance' (Opp.); also -τυπος (of ἄλσος) 'stamped by a band of dancers' (Nonn., perhaps also *h. •DER 1. Adjective χορ-ικός 'belonging to the choir, etc.' (Ar. [lyr.], Pl., Arist.), -εῖος [adj.] 'id.' (A. R., late), also [m.] name of a meter = τροχαῖος, τρίβραχυς (Cic., D. H.), -εῖον [n.] 'dancing-place' (LXX), -εῖα plur. 'thank-offering for a victory of a choir' (Delos III-II^a), 'choir-tax' (Pergam. II^p), -ιος = τροχαῖος, τρίβραχυς (AP), of ἐξελιγμός name of a tactical manoeuvre (Ael., Arr.). 2. -ῖτις [f.] 'dancer, choir-member' (Call., Nonn.), -ιτεία = -εία (Andania I^a), as if from *-ιτεύω. 3. Verb χορεύω [v.] 'to perform a choral dance, celebrate with dance, etc.' (Pi., IA), often prefixed, e.g. with ἀνα-, ἐπι-, συν-; thence -ευσις, -ευμα, -ευτής, -ευτικός. 4. περιχορίζειν· ἐνόπλως, συντόνως ὀρχεῖσθαι 'to dance in arms, vehemently' (H.).
By a cross of χορός and κορωνός (-νίς, -νη) arose χορωνός 'στέφανος', see Apion in Ath. 15, 680d and Güntert 1914: 129.
χορός has been connected, together with ►χόρτος, with a verb 'to seize, grasp' in Skt. hárati 'to bring, carry'. On the other hand, Lith. žãras 'row, twig, etc.' is phonetically identical with χορός. Meier-Brügger 2002 connected the root of χαίρω 'to rejoice', i.e. ǵ^{h}er-*, which seems reasonable.

χόρτος [m.] 'enclosure, court' (Λ 774, Ω 640), cf. χόρτον οὐρανοῦ· τὸ περιόρισμα 'enclosed place' (H.), 'pasture-ground' (Pi., E. [lyr.]), mostly 'pasture, fodder, grass, hay' (IA, Hes.). ◂IE g^{h}or-t-* 'fence'▸ •COMP Very frequent as a first member (Hell. and late), e.g. χορτο-φόρος 'bearing grass, transporting fodder'; also as a second member, e.g. σύγ-χορτος (of χθών, πεδία, etc.) 'whose χόρτοι are adjacent' (A., E.).
•DER 1. Diminutive χορτ-ίον [n.] 'small enclosure' (Erinn.), -άρια [n.pl.] 'coarse grass' (Dsc.). 2. Adjective χορτ-αῖος = 'μαλλωτός, ragged', from *'belonging to a court, rural, rustic' (Ar. Fr. 707a, D. H., Ael.), -αία γῆ 'pasture-land' (pap. IV^p); -ικός 'concerning hay' (Hell. and late pap., Ptol.), -ώδης 'grass-like, rich of grass' (LXX, Dsc.). 3. Verb χορτ-άζω (also ἀπο-, ἐπι- Sosith. 2, 13) [v.] 'to fodder, satiate, fatten' (Hes.), whence -ασία [f.] 'foddering, fattening' (LXX, late pap.), -ασμός [m.] 'id.' (Anaxandr.), -άσματα [n.pl.] (-ασμα [sg.]) 'fodder, nourishment' (Plb., LXX, D. H., Act. Ap.), -αστικώτερα 'foddering more' (H. s.v. καπανικώτερα).
•ETYM χόρτος phonetically corresponds with an Italo-Celtic word: Lat. hortus 'garden', OLat. 'villa, estate', Osc. húrz, acc. húrtúm 'enclosure'. and Celtic words like W garth 'hurdle, field', OIr. gort 'field'. These three branches require a pre-form g^{h}orto-*.
From other branches, several words which clearly go back on g^{h}ord^h-* must be adduced: OCS gradъ 'πόλις, κῆπος', Ru. górod 'town', Lith. gar̃das 'bed, hurdle', Alb. gardh, -dhi 'fence', and (with zero grade) also Skt. gr̥há- [m.] 'house'. This form, however, would have yielded Gr. *κόρθος.
For Germanic, it is necessary to pose IE g^{h}ord^h-* for some words, e.g. Go. gards [m.] 'house, garden', aurti-gards 'garden'; further cognates are ON garðr 'fence, enclosure, garden', etc.
Ambiguous regarding the suffixal stop is ToB kerciye 'palace'. It is also assumed that a number of toponyms from Anatolia and the eastern Mediterranean derive from this word: Hitt. gurta- [c.] 'citadel' (which can hardly be Anatolian, however; see Kloekhorst 2008 s.v.), Phr. Mane-gordum (also -zordum), Γόρδος, -ιον, Cret. Γόρτυς. This has been taken as evidence for an Indo-European substrate in Greece, see Heubeck 1961: 58ff.
IE g^{h}orto-* is generally considered a to-derivation of a verb for 'seize, grasp' found in Skt. hárati 'to bring, carry'. This presupposes that the initial palatovelar ǵ^h-* was depalatalized in Balto-Slavic and in Sanskrit. An initial palatal is in fact found in some semantically close Balto-Slavic words: Lith. žárdas 'scaffold for drying', žar̃dis 'Roßgarten, great pasture', OPr. sardis 'fence', Ru. zoród 'heap, fenced place', etc.; but a problem is that their accentuation points to a pre-form g^{h}ord-* (Winter's Law), not g^{h}ord^h-*.
The analysis as a participle from ǵ^{h}er-* 'to seize' has one remarkable detail: the o-grade of the root is unexpected.

χραεῖν [v.aor.] 'to attack, assault, inflict, take up, etc.', also with inf. (Hom., Nic., A. R. AP); ἐπέχραε, -ον also 'to affect, touch' (A. R., Q. S.).
•VAR Also with ἐπι-, only 3sg. (ἐπ-)έχραε, 3pl. (ἐπ-)έχραον, 2pl. ἐχράετε.
•ETYM ἔχρα(ϝ)ε, χρα(ϝ)εῖν are isolated thematic aorist forms, with zero grade of the root (cf. ἔϝαδε, (ϝ)αδεῖν s.v. ►ἀνδάνω, etc.). They are connected with Lat. in-gruō (from -uō or -auō) 'to rush', Lith. griáuti, 1sg. griáuju 'to destroy', and griū́ti, 1sg. griųvù 'to crumble'. This presupposes that the root is g^{h}reh$_2$u-* and that the palatalization in Lithuanian is secondary. A different (but not very attractive) proposal was made by Peters 1980b: 342, who assumes an analogical, secondary zero grade k^{h}rau-* to a root PG k^{h}reu-*. See ►ζαχρηής and ►χραύω.

χραισμέω [v.] 'to be of use, help, promote' (Il.). ◂?▸
•VAR Ind. -μεῖ (Nic. Th. 914), fut. χραισμήσω, aor. -ῆσαι, often them. aor. ἔχραισμε, χραῖσμε, ipv. χραίσμετε (A. R.), to which a subj. χραίσμῃ, probably also inf. -μεῖν (A. R.).
•ETYM An epic verb of unclear formation, which acc. to sch. A. R. 2, 218 was also used by the Arcadian Clitorians (cf. Ruijgh 1957: 164). Its formation presupposes a noun *χραισμός. The aorist ἔχραισμε could be best explained as analogical to χραισμεῖν (which would originally be a pres. inf.) after examples like ἔκτυπε to κτυπεῖν.
Acc. to Schwyzer: 723 and 748, ἔχραισμε is originally an ipf. of a denominative *χραίσμ-ι̯ω, which was reinterpreted as an aorist because of χραισμεῖν. The non-presentic forms χραισμ-ήσω, -ῆσαι may have been built later to ἔχραισμε (Chantraine 1942: 347) and have produced the late ind. pres. χραισμεῖ; the inf. χραισμεῖν was ambiguous from the beginning.
Etymologically obscure. It is semantically plausible to connect χρή, χρῆσθαι, but an analysis in *χραι-σμό-ς with a further unknown zero grade beside χρῆ-σις (Brugmann-Thumb l.c. after Mekler; also Bechtel 1914 s.v. and Schwyzer: 347) in unconvincing.

Further ἔχραυσεν· ἐπέτυχεν 'hit upon' and χραῦσαι· καταξῦσαι, χρᾶναι, σκιάσαι, γράψαι, ἐπιτυχεῖν 'to scratch, touch, cast a shadow, engrave, hit upon' (H.); ptc. med. χραυόμενον, also χραυζόμενον (-αυσσ-?) 'grazing, adjacent' (Cypr. inscr. [V^a]).

•ETYM The only remains of this verb are found in the epic tradition (cf. Ruijgh 1957: 131). It can hardly be separated from χρα(ϝ)εῖν, ἔχρα(ϝ)ε 'to attack, etc.'. If the word is Indo-European, we have to assume a root g^hreh$_2$u-*. For the vocalism cf. ψαύω, χναύω, ►θραύω. See further on ►χρόα, ►χρίω.

χρεμετίζω [v.] 'to whinny, neigh' (M 51, Hdt., Pl., LXX, Q. S.). ◂IE g^hrem-* 'thunder, rumble'▸ •COMP Rarely with ὑπο-, ἐν-.
•DER χρεμετ-ισμός [m.] 'whinnying' (Ar. [lyr.], LXX, D. H.), -ισμα [n.] 'id.' (AP, Iamb. Bab.), -ιστικός 'fond of whinnying' (Ph., S. E., Plu., etc.).
Further χρεμ-έθω 'id.' (A. R., Q. S., Opp., AP), also with ἐπι-, and -ίζω, only aor. 3pl. χρέμισαν (Hes. Sc. 348), χρεμετᾷ· ἠχεῖ 'resounds' (H.), Χρεμέτης [m.] name of a river in Libya (Arist., Nonn.).
Several nouns: 1. χρόμος· ψόφος ποιός 'kind of noise'. οἱ δὲ χρεμετισμός and χρόμη· φρυαγμός, ὁρμή, θράσος 'neighing, impulse, boldness' (H.). 2. χρόμαδος (γενύων) 'gnashing' (Ψ 688), see ὅμαδος, κέλαδος. 3. fish names (after natural sounds; see Strömberg 1943: 65ff.): χρόμις, also χρόμιος [m., f.] (Anan., Epich., Arist.), χρέμης, -ητος [m.] (Opp., Ael.), also ►χρέμυς: ὁ ὀνίσκος ἰχθῦς (H., also Arist. v.l. κρ-), cf. Thompson 1947 s.v. χρόμις. 4. Several PNs and nicknames, e.g. Χρέμης, Χρέμων, Χρεμύλος, Χρομίος, Χρόμις, Χρομύλος.
On itself stands χρέμπτομαι, aor. χρέμψασθαι [v.] 'to clear one's throat, cough up, spit out' (IA), also prefixed, e.g. with ἀνα-, ἀπο-, κατα-, ἐπι-. Thence ἀνά-, ἀπό-χρεμψις [f.] 'coughing up' (Hp.), χρέμμα (also ἀνά-, ἔν-) [n.] 'expectoration' (Hp.). Perhaps the fish name χρέμψ is a back-formation (Strömberg 1943: 67).
•ETYM As basis of these words we must posit a primary verb *χρέμω (cf. βρέμω, Lat. fremō; from this χρόμος etc.), which however had to give up for several popular-expressive enlargements: χρεμ-ίζω (: γεμ-ίζω, στεναχ-ίζω, ἐρεθ-ίζω), -έθω (: φλεγ-έθω, τελ-έθω), -ετάω, -ετίζω (: Χρεμέτης, ναι-ετ-άω, αἰρε-τ-ίζω, ἐρα-τ-ίζω, τερετίζω).
A special position has χρέμπτομαι (-πτ- onomatopoeic as in πτύω?); perhaps it does not belong at all here (cf. WH s.v. scratta with another hypothesis).
There is no exact outer-Greek correspondence to the verb, but the root g^hrem-* is Indo-European. In Balto-Slavic, there are sound verbs with different ablaut, like Lith. grumė́ti, 1sg. grumù 'to thunder, roar, rumble', gramė́ti, 1sg. gramù 'to fall in the depth with noise', and OCS grъměti, 1sg. grъmljǫ 'βροντᾶν, to thunder', Ru. gremét', 1sg. gremljú [v.] 'to thunder, tinkle, rattle', OCS gromъ 'thunder' (which formally matches χρόμος).
Germanic has several expressions for anger and grumbling, which must originally have referred to sounds like droning, gnashing the teeth, etc.: ON grimmr 'grim, excited', OHG grim 'wild, cruel' < PGm. grimma-* < g^hrem-no-*, ON gramr, OHG gram 'wrathful' < PGm. grama-* < g^hromo-*, Go. gramjan, OHG gremman [v.] 'to get angry or embittered'. The same meaning is encountered in Av. graman̩tąm [ptc.gen.pl.] 'of those who are wrathful to us', MoP γaram 'wrath'.

•DER χρῶμαι < *χρή-ομαι [v.] 'to need, use, utilise; to treat, handle, associate with someone' (since Ψ 834), also with ἀνα-, κατα-, παρα-, προσ-, etc., in various shades of meaning (IA); also 'to consult an oracle or a god' (Od.).

Ion. (also Dor. in Sophr. 126) has χρέομαι, ptc. χρεώμενος; 3sg. χρῆται, inf. χρῆσθαι (Ion. Hell. also χρᾶται, -ᾶσθαι after ὁρᾶται, -ᾶσθαι, etc.), aor. χρήσασθαι, fut. χρήσομαι, perf. κέχρημαι. The aor. also means 'to borrow (from)', perhaps from 'to put in use for oneself' or to the act. χρῆσαι (E., etc.); the perf. (especially ptc. κεχρημένος) means 'to require, crave, desire' (epic poet. T 262).

It is probably an old denominative. Active forms in special mgs. were secondarily created to the medial forms: to χρήσασθαι, χρήσομαι, χρῶμαι 'to consult an oracle', χρῆσαι, χρήσω, χρῶ arose, in the sense 'to give an oracle' (since θ 79), with 3sg. χρῇ and χρᾷ, ptc. χρείων = χρήων, also with ἐξ- etc., with pass. aor. ἐχρήσθη 'an oracle was granted', plpf. ἐκέχρη(σ)το, etc. (Pi., IA).

In a similar vein, the active χρῆσαι 'to lend (to)' arose to χρήσασθαι 'to borrow (from)'. Fut. χρήσω, also with προ-, ἐπι- etc. (IA) with κέχρηκα (Hell.) and the new present κίχρημι, κίχραμαι, also χρήννυμι, -ύω (Thphr., Hell. pap.).

On itself stands with prefix, especially ἀπο- (IA), also (Hdt.) ἐκ-, κατα-, ἀντι-χρᾷ (Att. ἀπόχρη after χρή), -έχρησα, -χρήσω 'to suffice, to serve', mostly 3. sg. 'it is sufficient', with unexplained development of mg.

Secondary verbal forms: 1. χρη-έομαι in Megar. χρηείσθω (Calchedon), Boeot. χρειεισθη, El. χρεεσται 'to need'. 2. χρη-ΐζω, χρεΐζω, χρῄζω [v.] 'to be in need, require, desire, wish' (since Λ 835; cf. κεχρημένος above). 3. χρη-ΐσκονται 'they require, lack' (Hdt. 3, 117).

A concise survey of nouns derived from χρῶμαι or from χρή (a sharp distinction is not possible in all cases): 1. χρεώ, -οῦς [f.] (secondarily [n.]) 'requirement, need, necessity, desire' (Il., epic), also χρειώ = χρηώ. To this χρεών and χρεόν [n.] 'id.' (Pi., IA), with -ν after δέον, προσῆκον, etc.

2. χρέος 'obligation, debt, fee, commitment, engagement, affair' (IA, also θ 353, λ 479), epic also χρεῖος = χρῆος (since Il.), Att. also χρέως [n.], plur. χρέᾰ (Hes. Op. 647), χρέᾱ (Ar.), χρῆα (Arc. IV[a]), which is much more probable than a lecture *χρήατα from *χρῆϝαρ; further χρήϊα < *χρήεα (Cret.).

3. χρεία (Ion. -ίη) [f.] 'requirement, desire, wish, use, praxis, benefit, help, service, function, association', rhet. 'theme of a speech' (Thgn., Att., Hell.); χρηΐα· πενία 'poverty, need' (H.), χρει-ώδης 'needy, necessitous, useful' (Hell.), -ακός [m.] 'official' (Peripl. M.Rubr., pap. III[p]); ἀ-χρεῖος, Att. ἄ-χρειος, Ion. ἀ-χρήϊος 'useless, unusable, unapt' (since Hes.). The ntr. ἀχρεῖον as an adverb to ἰδών, ἐγέλασσεν (B 269, σ 163), to κλάζον (Theoc. 25, 72), but the mg. is not quite clear; after this χρεῖος 'useful, apt' (Hell., but rare).

4. χρῆμα [n.] 'affair which one needs, object, thing, etc.', mostly plur. 'goods, property, money' (Od.), whence χρηματίτης ἀγών 'competition with a money-prize' (Marm. Par.), χρημα-τίζω, -τίζομαι [v.] 'to negotiate, do business, etc.' (Att., Hell.), also 'to handle a name, give an oracle, prophesy' (Hell.), whence -τισμός, -τισις, -τιστής, -τιστήριον, -τιστικός.

5. χρήμη [f.] 'need, requirement' (Archil. et al.).

6. χρη(σ)μοσύνη [f.] 'need, poverty' (Thgn., Tyrt.), χρησμ- also 'aid' (A. R.), cf. on χρησμός, but ἀχρημο-σύνη [f.] 'need, lack' (ρ 502, Thgn. 156) from ἀ-χρήμων. 7. χρῆσις [f.] 'use, application, benefit, intercourse, association' (Pi., IA), also 'response of an oracle' (Pi.), 'loan' (Arist., Plb.), whence χρήσ-ιμος 'usable, useful, proficient' (Thgn.+), -ιμότης, -ιμεύω.

8. χρησμός [m.] 'response of an oracle' (Pi., IA), very frequent as a first member, e.g. χρησμο-λόγος 'prophesying, prophet' (IA); in the same mg. probably χρησμο-σύνη (Hdt. 9, 33).

9. χρηστήριον [n.] 'seat of an oracle, response of an oracle, sacrifice to it' (h. Ap.+), like μυστήριον, δικαστήριον, etc. Thence -ήριος 'belonging to an oracle' (Hdt., A., E., etc.), -ηριάζομαι [v.] 'to consult an oracle' (Hdt.), but χρηστήρια σκεύη [n.pl.] 'utensils, furniture' (Argos [VI[a]], Pl. Com., Hell. inscr. and pap.).

10. χρήστης [m.] 'lender, creditor', also 'debtor' (Att., etc.), also χρεώστης 'debtor' (late) after χρέως; χρήστης and χρήστωρ also = μάντις (H.);

11. χρητῆρες [pl.] = χρηστήρια 'furniture' (pap. II[a])?

12. χρηστός 'usable, fit, proficient, good' (IA), whence -ότης, -οσύνη, -εύομαι; often as a second member, e.g. ἄ-χρηστος 'unusable, useless' (IA; = ἀχρεῖος); but πυθό-χρηστος (trag.), θεό-χρηστος (Ph.) 'prophesied by (the Pythian) god' from χράω 'to give an oracle, prophesy'.

13. χρεῖος 'poor, needy' (A., E., late prose) is probably for χρήϊος to χρή; beside it χρεῖος 'useful' from ἀ-χρεῖος (see 3).

On χρή, χρῶμαι and their derivations see the extensive treatment by Redard 1953.

•ETYM χρή is formally isolated within Greek. As a closest formal counterpart, we find frozen accusatives πλήν and δήν < $pleh_2$-m, $dueh_2$-m and ἐπί-κλη-ν, further the ambiguous forms ►ὁμοκλή and ►μεσόδμη. In other languages, monosyllables like Lat. spēs 'hope', and compounds like Skt. prati-mā́ [f.] 'picture' (from *meh_1-), Lith. avì-dė [f.] 'sheepfold' (to τίθημι) are found, cf. Pedersen 1926: 71ff.

Though χρή is best considerd a feminine, many scholars preferred to see an old neuter in it (Wackernagel, Fraenkel, Hermann). As a basic meaning 'need, necessity, duty, custom', which is usually assumed, arose without a doubt by abstraction or generalization, all etymologies are quite hypothetical.

Connection with χαρῆναι, χαίρω was proposed by Brugmann 1886-1900 II: 962, Pedersen l.c.; that with Skt. hárati 'to bring, carry' (cf. on ►χόρτος) by Brugmann IF 37 (1916-1917): 239f. These proposals are far from convincing. As I found no noun ending in a long vowel in Pre-Greek, nor any indication for laryngeals, I rather think that the word is Indo-European, perhaps g^hreh_1.

χρίμπτομαι, -τω [v.] med. (mostly intr.) 'to force one's way near, come near, strike firmly', act. (mostly trans.) 'to force near, bring close to something, make crash' (epic poet. since κ 516). ⊲IE? g*^{h}reib^{h}- 'grab'⊳

•VAR Aor. med. (ἐγ-)χριμφθῆναι, fut. ἐγχρίμψομαι; act. (ἐγ-)χρίμψαι; aor. med. χρίμψασθαι can be both trans. and intr.

•COMP Also with prefix, especially ἐν- (Il., epic Ion. poet., late prose).

•ETYM The similarity with χρίω (cf. also χραύω) has long since bee observed; for the ending -μπτομαι no parallel has been found except for (the imitation?) σκίμπτομαι. The resembling χρέμπτομαι is semantically far off.

Kölligan, in a paper read at the 13th Fachtagung der indogermanischen Gesellschaft, Salzburg 2008, proposes a nasal present to the root g*^{h}reib^{h}- (Go. greipan, Lith. griẽbti 'to grab', 1sg. griebiù, to which Greek secondarily made a yod-present. So g*^{h}rimb^{h}- > PGr. k*^{h}rimp^{h}- + -i̯e/o- > χριμπτε/ο-.

χρῑ́ω, -ομαι [v.] 'to graze, spread, (be)smear, enqueue, anoint, plaster' (Il.). ⊲IE? g*^{h}rei(H)- 'strike'⊳

•VAR Late also -ῐ-. Aor. χρῖσαι, -σασθαι (Il.), -σθῆναι (A.), fut. χρίσω (E.), -σομαι (Od.), -σθήσομαι (LXX), perf. κέχριμαι (Hdt.), -ισμαι (LXX), κέχρικα (LXX).

•COMP Often prefixed, e.g. with ἐπι-, ἐν-, κατα-, ὑπο-.

•DER 1. χρῖσις (also ἔγ-, κατά-, etc.) [f.] 'spreading, besmearing, anointing, tinging' (Hp., Arist., Hell.), χρίσιμος (sch.). 2. χρῖμα (A., X., Call.), more usual χρῖσμα, later χρίσμα (after κλίμα, θέμα, etc.) [n.] ' ointment, tincture, etc.', also with ἐπί-, περί-, etc. 3. δια-, συγ-χρισμός [m.] 'anointing, ointment' (medic.). 4. χρῖσται [m.pl.] (H. s.v. κονιαταί). 5. χριστήριον [n.] 'oil, oil-bottle' (Suid.). 6. χριστός (also ἐπί-, κατά-, etc.) 'fit for spreading or anointing' (A. Pr. 480, E.), 'anointed', msc. 'the anointed one' (LXX), whence 'Messiah, Christ' (NT).

•ETYM The regular inflexion of χρίω is clearly a late creation. A convincing outer-Greek connection does not exist. Mostly connected with Lith. grieti, 1sg. gr(i)ejù 'to skim cream from the milk'; the same root would be found in the Germanic group of OE grīma [m.] 'mask, helmet, ghost', MLG grēme [f.] 'dirt', etc. The comparison with NPhr. γεγρειμεναν [ptc.] 'painted, adorned, written, γεγραμμένος' vel sim. (Haas Sprache 6 (1960): 19ff.) is tempting. The Lithuanian verb seems to point to an aniṭ root, so if it is related to χρῖω, the length in Greek must be secondary.

•VAR Also χροιά, Ion. χροιή (see below). Further χρώς [f.], gen. χρο-ός, dat. -ΐ, acc. χρόα, younger gen. χρω-τός (since K 575), -τί (since Pi.), -τα (Od., Hes. Op. 556), plur. -τες (Arist.) 'surface of the body, skin, skin-color', also 'flesh, body', rarely 'color' (Il., epic Ion. poet.). A fixed expression is ἐν χρῷ (Att.), which is older than ἐν χροΐ (Ion.) 'close to the skin' (e.g. κείρειν), metaph. 'very close, hard by' (with gen.), cf. Schwyzer: 578.

•COMP Very frequent as a second member, e.g. μελανό-χρο-ος 'with a dark skin' (τ 246), which is thematicized; athem. inflection preserved in plur. μελανό-χρο-ες (N 589), μελάγ-χρο-ες (Hdt.); younger μελάγ-χρωτες, -χρωτα (E. [lyr.]), nom. -χρως (Pl. Phdr. 253e), etc. On -χροος, -χρους, -χρως as a second member see Sommer 1948: 21ff.; also μελαγ-χροιής 'id.' (to χροιή [π 175]) and -χρής (com., pap.), after the adjectives in -ής.

•DER 1. Diminutive χρωτ-ίδιον (Cratin.).

2. Verbs: perf. med. κέχρωσμαι, -μένος (IA), aor. χρωσθῆναι (Att.) 'to take on a color or hue, etc.', act. χρῶσαι (Arist.), ἐπι- κέχρωκα (Plu.), χρώσειν (H.), χροΐζω, χρῴζω (Alex., Nic., Dsc.), 'to color, stain', later also χρώννυμι, -ύω (Luc., Lib., Plot.); χροΐζω, χρῴζω, -ομαι also 'to touch (a surface), unite with someone' (Pi., E. [lyr.], Theoc.); often prefixed, e.g. with ἐπι-, κατα-, παρα-; cf. also on χροιά below.

Hence several verbal nouns: a) χρῶμα [n.] 'color (of the skin), make-up; characteristic appearance, e.g. of a chromatic scale, of a speech, etc.' (IA); thence χρω-μάτια [pl.] = -ματα (AP), -ματικός (music., rhet.) 'chromatic' (Hell.), -μάτινος 'colorful' (Peripl. M. Rubr.), χρωματίζω, -ομαι (also ἐπι-) 'to color, tinge' (Hp., Pl., Arist.). b) χρῶσις (also with ἀνά-, ἀπό-, ἐπί-) [f.] 'coloring' (Epicur., pap., Plu.). c) χρωστήρ [m.] 'that which colors' (AP). d) from χροΐζω 'to color': χρό-ϊσις, -ϊσμός (gloss.), ἐπιχρό-ϊσις mg. unclear (Thphr.).

3. χρωτ-ίζω, -ίζομαι (also συν-ανα-) 'to color, give an appearance' (Ar. [lyr.], Plu.).

From χρώς, χρο-ός also χρο-ιά, -ιή (like σκοπ-ιά, λοφ-ιά, etc.: χρόα is like ῥόα (to ῥοιά, ῥοιή), πόα, etc.). Hence χροῖα [n.pl.] 'colors' (Emp.), ἐπιχροαί [f.pl.] 'id.' (Thphr.), χρο-άζω [v.] 'to color' (late medic.), cf. χροΐζω above. Further χροτιή [f.] 'skin' (AP 15, 35), a cross of χροιή and χρώς, -ωτός.

•ETYM χρώς is an old s-stem, and its complicated declination reminds of that of ἔρως, γέλως, αἰδώς. Acc. to DELG, the Mycenaean form a-ko-ro-we-e (cf. εὔχροές, ξ 24) points to a root k*^{h}row-, to which χρώς is an s-stem formation which underwent hyphaeresis: gen. k*^{h}rowosos > k*^{h}rohos. DELG assumes that most forms arose by such a process, e.g. χροιά < k*^{h}rowosi̯a. κέχρωσμαι is probably an analogical form to χρωΐζω.

The superficial similarity with χραύω, χραίνω, χρίω is not sufficient for a solid etymological proposal. The assumption of vowel assimilation from *χραϝός (Schmidt KZ 32 (1893): 370[1]f.) is dictated by the desire to connect ►χραύω.

χρόμαδος •VAR χρόμις, χρόμιος. ⇒χρεμετίζω.

χρόνος [m.] 'period or course of time, (a definite) time, lifetime, time limit' (Il.), plur. χρόνοι also 'year' (= Lat. tempora, since III-IV^p; see Schwyzer: 124f.). ⊲?⊳

•COMP As a first member, e.g. χρονο-γράφος [m.] 'chronicler, annalist' (Str.), -γραφία [f.] 'chronicle, yearbook' (Plb.). Often as a second member, e.g. σύγ-χρονος 'at the same time', συγχρον-έω, -ίζω, -σμός (Hell.); also suffixed, e.g. πολυ-χρόν-ιος 'comprising a long time, lasting, durable' (h. Merc.+), whence -ία, -ιότης, -ίζω (Arist., Hell.).

•DER 1. χρον-ίσκος [m.] 'small timespan' (LXX). 2. -ιος 'protracted, late' (ρ 112), -ιότης [f.] 'long period' (Thphr.), -ιόομαι 'to become protracted, chronic' (Hp.). 3. -ικός 'concerning time' (D. H., D. S., Plu.). 4. χρον-ίζω (also ἐγ-) 'to spend the time (somewhere), abide, be late, linger' (IA), whence -ισμός [m.] (Hell.), also with ἐγ-. 5. χρον-ῶσαι 'to make temporal' (Plot.).
•ETYM Etymology unknown. On the model of κλόνος and θρόνος, it has been assumed that χρόνος should be analyzed as χρ-ονο- < *g^h*r-ono-*, from a root 'seize, bring' also supposed for ►χόρτος. On the semantic side, an original meaning "encompassing time-limit" has been assumed for χρόνος, or even "seizer" (Porzig 1942: 346). A number of verbal roots *g^h*er-* etc. exist (see LIV^2). However, it is rather doubtful that ►κλόνος and ►θρόνος should be analysed in this way, as DELG already remarked. Other words for 'time' are ►καιρός, which is etymologically unclear too, and inherited ►αἰών.

χρῡσός [m.] 'gold' (Il.). ⊲LW Sem.⊳
•VAR Secondarily -ῠ-, see Schwyzer: 516^2.
•DIAL Myc. ku-ru-so.
•COMP Productive in compounds, e.g. Myc. ku-ru-so-wo-ko = χρυσ-ουργός (LXX) 'gold-worker'; χρυσό-θρονος (see on ►θρόνα), χρυσ-ώνητος 'bought with money', designation of a slave (Callistr. Hist.), ὑπό-χρυσος "with gold below", 'auriferous, gilt' (Pl., Hell. inscr.); on prefixed compounds with χρυσός, see Strömberg 1946: 136.
•DER 1. χρυσ-ίον [n.] 'gold, golden ornaments, golden coins, money' (IA), -ίδιον [n.] with contemptuous connotation (Att. orators), -ιδάριον [n.] (Ar.), also -άφιον (Hdn., Eust.). 2. χρυσ-εῖον, mostly plur. -εῖα [n.] 'goldmine' (X., Plb.). 3. χρυσ-ίς, -ίδος [f.] 'golden vessel, dress, golden shoe, etc.' (com., inscr., Luc.). 4. χρυσ-αλλίς, -ίδος [f.] 'gold-colored larva of a butterfly' (Arist., Thphr.), also = μηλολόνθη (Eust.), cf. ►θρυαλλίς. 5. χρύσ-αφος [m.] name of a fish (Marc. Sid.), like ἔλαφος; also χρύσοφος (Cyran.), for χρύσ-οφρυς (Strömberg 1943: 26). 6. χρυσ-ίτης [m.], mostly -ῖτις [f.] 'goldish, auriferous, gold-ore' (Hdt., Hp., Str.). 7. Adjectives: a) χρύσ-εος, late also -ειος, Att. -οῦς 'golden, gold-colored, etc.' (Il.), -οῦς (scil. στατήρ) name of a golden coin; also as a first member, e.g. χρυσεο-πήληξ 'with a golden helmet' (h. Mart., Call.), metrical variant of χρυσο-πήληξ (A. [lyr.], E.). b) χρύσ-ινος 'golden' (late). c) χρυσ-ικός 'id.', [n.pl.] 'hardcash' (pap.). d) comparative χρυσ-οτέρα [f.] 'gold to a higher degree' (Sapph., late epigr.). 8. Verbs: a) χρυσ-όομαι (mostly perf. ptc. κεχρυσωμένος 'gilt'), also -όω 'to gild' (IA), also with prefix, especially κατα-; thence -ωμα, -ωσις, -ωτήρ, -ώτρια, -ών. b) χρυσ-ίζω 'to be golden or gold-like, abound in gold' (Arist., Dsc.). c) χρυσ-αΐζεται· κοσμεῖται (H.). Also in PNs, e.g. Χρύσης, -ηΐς, -η.
•ETYM A Semitic loan word, usually assumed to be Punic. Cf. Akk. ḫurāṣu, Ugar. ḫrṣ, Phoen. ḥrs%, Hebr. ḥārus̱. See E. Masson 1967: 37f. for further details.
An IE word for 'gold' from the root *$g^h lh_3$- is found in Germanic, Balto-Slavic and Indo-Iranian, e.g. Go. gulþ, Ru. zóloto, Latv. zèlts, Skt. híraṇya-, Av. zaraniia- [n.]; the root is found in Gr. ►χολή.
Another IE word is retained in Italic and Baltic: Lat. aurum, Lith. áuksas (with secondary -k-), OPr. ausis, and perhaps in ToA wäs, ToB yasa.

χρῶμα •VAR χρώς. ⇒χρόα.

•COMP Some compounds, e.g. χυλο-ποιέω [v.] 'to turn into juice' (medic.), γλυκύ-χυλος 'with sweet juice' (Hp., Xenocr.).
•DER 1. Diminutive χυλ-άριον [n.] 'little juice', hypocoristic (M. Ant.). 2. -ώδης 'juice-like, juicy' (late). 3. χυλ-όομαι (also -όω) 'to convert into juice, be turned into it, etc.' (medic.), also with ἀπο-, ἐκ-, ἐν-, etc. Thence χύλωμα, (ἐγ-)χύλωσις. 4. χυλ-ίζω 'to extract juice, turn into juice' (Hp., Arist., Thphr.), also with ἐκ-, ἐν-, ἀπο-; thence -ισμα, -ισμός. 5. χυλ-ιάζω 'id.' (Aet.).
Beside it stands χῡμός [m.] 'juice (of plants and bodies), liquid, taste, aroma' (IA). As a second member e.g. in ἔγ-χυμος 'having juice inside, juicy' (Hp., Pl., Arist., Thphr.). Hence the diminutive χυμ-ίον [n.] (com.); -ώδης 'juicy' (sch.), verb -όομαι 'to be turned into juice' (Gal.), -όω 'to give taste' (Suid.), with ἐκ- 'to squeeze out, extract juice'; thence -ωμα, -ωσις (Hp.). χυμίζω [v.] 'to make tasty' (Ar.), with ἐκ- = ἐκχυμόω (Arist.).
•ETYM Both χυλός and χυμός have traditionally been connected with ►χέω 'to pour', but it is unclear how the long ῡ can be explained. Positing a suffix *-slo- or *-smo- is not really satisfactory, as no other form with *g^h*u-s-* is known.

χυμεία [f.] 'the art of alloying metals, alchemy' (Zos. Alch., Olymp. Alch.). ⊲?⊳
•VAR Also χημεία.
•DER Besides χύμευσις (χήμ-) [f.] 'id.' (EM, Eust., Tz.), -ευτικός 'concerning χ.' (Zos., Olymp.).
•ETYM As DELG remarks, the late attestations do not allow to draw a conclusion regarding whether υ or η is original.
The old etymology by Pott, deriving the word from the indigenous name of Egypt Χημία (Plu.), copt. Κημε, Χημι, which originally means 'Black-land' (Plu.), remains a possibility. χυμεία would derive either from a verb *χημεύω 'to work in an Egyptian way' or, with -εία after μαγεία, it would mean "the Egyptian art". The notation χυμ- would then be popular after χυμός.
According to Diels, however, it is a Greek word deriving from χύμα (see ►χέω) in the sense 'casting, alloying', whence *χυμεύω and then χυμεία = 'the art of alloying metal'. It is beyond our reach to make a decision between these alternatives. Older proposals, which are obviously dated, are given by Frisk.

•COMP E.g. χωλό-πους 'lame-footed' (Man.), χωλό-χειρος 'lame-handed' (Hippon.).
•DER χωλότης [f.] 'lameness' (Plu., Iul.) and several denominatives: 1. χωλ-εύω (also ἀπο-) [v.] 'to be lame', also 'to make lame' (Il.), whence -εία [f.] (Pl.), -εύματα [pl.] (Hp.). 2. χωλ-όομαι (also ἀπο-) [v.] 'to be or become lame', rare -όω [v.] 'to make lame' (Hp., Th., Paus.), whence -ωσις, -ωμα (Hp.). 3. χωλ-αίνω (also ὑπο-, συν-) [v.] 'to be or become lame' (Hp., Pl., LXX, pap.), whence -ανσις, -ασμα (late).

•ETYM Seemingly, a formation with the suffix -lo-, like ►στρεβλός, ►τυφλός, but without obvious etymology. Does it belong to ►χαλάω 'to slacken, relax'? Or is it from $\acute{g}^h$oh$_1$-ló-, from the root $\acute{g}^h$eh$_1$- 'to leave behind' seen in ►χήρα 'widow' (Van Beek p.c.): a lame person being someone who lags or stays behind.

•VAR -ύω (Arist., Hell.); rare προσ-χοῖ, χοῦσι, χοῦν, χῶν (as if from *χόω; Hdt., Th.), aor. χῶσαι, -σασθαι, -σθῆναι, perf. med. κέχωσμαι (IA), act. κέχωκα (D., Arist.), fut. χώσω (Att.).
•COMP Very frequently prefixed, e.g. with ἐπι-, προσ-, κατα-, συν-.
•DER χῶμα (rare and late -σμα) [n.] 'heap, rubbish, dam, wall' (IA), -σις [f.] 'heaping up, raising, damming' (Th., Hell.), often from prefixed verbs, e.g. ἀνάχωμα, ἔγχωσις, etc. Also χωστρίς (χελώνη) 'a shed to protect besiegers who fill up a ditch' (Hell.).
•ETYM The above system of forms is built on the aorist χῶσαι, which replaced the unclear form χέαι and may represent either *χοῶσαι (denominative of χόος, χοῦς) or a contraction from *χοῆσαι to *χοέω (cf. νῶσαι < νοῆσαι from νοέω and σοῦμαι s.v. ►σεύομαι), which would be a denominative or an intensive to ►χέω. All other forms were secondarily created, e.g. the present χώννυμι, -ύω. The presentic forms -χοῖ, χοῦσι, etc. have never become dominant. Further details on the etymology s.v. ►χέω.

•ETYM Formation like ►ῥώομαι or ►πλώω, so is it perhaps deverbative to ►χέω 'to pour', as was proposed already by Aristarchus (χωόμενος = συγχεόμενος) and repeated by Frisk? On the formal side, see also Chantraine 1942: 365; on the meaning in Hom. see Adkins JHS 89 (1969): 13ff.

χώρα [f.] 'space, interspace, place, position, rank, location, region, estate, land, country' (Il., IA), also 'eye-hole' (Epid.). ◂?▸
•VAR χῶρος [m.] 'space, region, land' (Il.), rare in Att. prose, except in X.
•COMP As a first member e.g. χωρο-γράφ-ος [m.] 'describer of countries, chorographer', whence -έω, -ία (Plb., Str.). Gained an enormous productivity as a second member, e.g. πλησιό-χωρος 'inhabiting a nearby country, neighbouring, neighbour' (IA), also in hypostases with an enlargement -ιο-, e.g. ἐγ-χώρ-ιος 'situated in the region, native, indigenous' (Pi., IA).
•DER 1. χωρ-ίον [n.] 'space, place, location, estate' (prose since Hdt.). 2. diminutive -ίδιον [n.] (Lys., Plu.), -άφιον [n.] (Thphr.) 'small estate', -αφιαῖος (Hdn.). 3. On ►χωριαμός· κίστη 'vessel' (H.), see s.v. 4. -ίτης [m.] 'countryman, farmer, native inhabitant' (A., S., X.), -ῖτις [f.] 'woman from the countryside' (Luc.), -ιτικός (X., Plu.). 5. Adjective -ικός 'rural, rustic' (late); -άσμιαι epithet of ἐλαῖαι (Pamphyl. [II^p]; after ἀποδάσμιος?).

6. verbs: a) χωρέω, -ῆσαι, -ήσω (Il., in Att. the act. fut. only with prefix, but otherwise -ήσομαι); κεχώρηκα (IA), -ηθῆναι, -ηθήσομαι, κεχώρηται (Att.) 'to make room, give way, recede' (Il., trag.), 'to step (forward), go forth, make progress', trans. 'to comprehend, contain' (IA), also 'to catch' = 'to understand' (late), intr. 'to find a place' (Ev. Jo. 8, 37), very frequently prefixed in various mgs., e.g. ἀνα-, ἀπο-, ἐν-, προ-, προσ-, συν-, ὑπο-. Thence nominal derivatives in -ημα, -ημάτιον, -ησις, -ητικός.
b) χωράζω, Dor. aor. -άξαι 'to situate, position, raise' (Hell. inscr.).
Isolated χωρίς [adv., prep.] 'separated, detached, far from, apart' (H 470), χῶρι (accus. acc. to Hdn., Choerob.) 'id.' (Thera, Cos, Crete, Call., Test. Epict., pap. II^p). The formation reminds of ἅλις, μόγις, etc.; the accent perhaps after ἀμφίς?
Thence χωρίζω 'to separate, part' (IA), med. 'to depart' (Plb., D. S.), also with ἀνα-, ἀπο-, ἐκ-, etc. Also in hypostases like κατα-χωρ-ίζω 'to put in place (κατὰ χώραν), publish, enrol' (X., Hell.); thence -ισις, -ισμός, -ισμα, -ιστής, -ιστικός, -ιστός.
•ETYM The formation in -ρ- has been compared with ἀγρός, τάφρος, ἕδρα and other designations of place (Frisk), but is without agreement outside Greek. Assuming a basic meaning 'unoccupied space', χώρα and χῶρος can be connected with ►χήρα 'widow', from a root $\acute{g}^h$eh$_1$- 'to leave behind' (LIV^2 s.v. $\acute{g}^h$eh$_1$- 'zurücklassen'). Under this etymology, ►χατέω cannot be connected. The analysis remains uncertain (DELG).

With simplification of the anlaut: σαιστός· ἐλαία θλαστή 'crushed olives' (H.), cf. σώχω : ψώχω. Other glosses from H. are ψαιδρός = ἀραιός 'loose' and with a suffix -νυ- ψαινύντες· ψωμίζοντες 'feeding in bits'; ψαίνυον· ἀχρεῖον 'rendering useless'; ψαίνυσμα· ὀλίγον 'little'; ψαινύθιον· ψευδές, μάταιον, εὐτελές, φλύαρον, οἰκτρόν 'false, idle, mean, rubbish, pitiable'. This reminds of ψαίνυνθα θεσπίζοντα 'prophesying falsely' (Lyc. 1420) = ψευδῆ νομοθετοῦντα ἢ μαντευόμενον (like μίνυνθα, see Schwyzer: 629). The PN Ψαίδαρος confirms the gloss ψαιδρά· ἀραιότριχα (H.), O. Masson 1992: 146.
•ETYM Formation like in ►ῥαίω, ►-κναίω (κνῆν), ►πταίω, etc.; cf. also on ►ψῆν. The word is probably Pre-Greek, in view of the variant with σ-.

ψακάς [f.] 'drop', especially of rain; collective 'drizzle' (Hdt., Hp., trag., Ar., X., Arist.). ◁PG(S,V)▷ •VAR Ion. and Hell. also ψεκάς, -άδος (cf. Schwyzer: 258).
•DER Diminutive ψακάδ-ιον [n.] (Hell. com.,Thphr.), also ψεκ-; -ισσα [f.] 'spotted, dappled', of a mare (pap. III[a]) see Mayser 1906-1938, I: 3: 103; also ψακαδ-ίσχιος of horses (ibid.) 'with dappled haunches?'. Verb ψακάζω 'to drip, spray, drizzle' (A., Ar., X., Plu.), also ψεκ-, and prefixed with κατα-, ἐπι-, ὑπο-; aor. ptc. pass. ψακασθείς 'besprinkled' (Thphr.).
We also find ψάκαλον [n.], -ος [m.] in the meaning 'new-born animal' (Ar. Byz., H.); the same metaphor is found with ►δρόσος and ἔρση. The suffix reminds of ►ἔταλον.
•ETYM The formation is similar to that of ἰκμάς, ψιάς, λιβάς (Frisk notes ψακάδ- next to ψάκαλον, like ἰκμάδ- beside ἰκμαλ-έος). Connection with the group of ►ψῆν is highly unlikely, because the κ-enlargement would remain unclear.
There is no reason to call -ακ- an infix (as per Schwyzer: 497); it is simply part of the root ψακ-/ ψεκ-. In view of the suffix -αδ- or -αλ-, it is probably Pre-Greek. The connection with Lith. spãkas 'drop, point' (also spãgas) may be correct, in which case both go back to a 'substrate language' of the northern Balkans. Beside ψάκαλον, Fur.: 339 cites a form ψαίκαλον· ἔμβρυον, βρέφος 'new-born, cub' (H.), with an interchange -α-/-αι- typical for Pre-Greek.

•ETYM Enlargement of ►ψάλλω; cf. ἀφάσσω to ἀφάω, σαλάσσω, παλάσσω, etc., also ►ψαθάλλω. The word is most probably Pre-Greek, because of its a-vocalism.

ψάλιον [n.] 'curb-chain' vel sim. (Att. since A.); on the unclear mg. see Anderson JHS 88 (1968): 3ff. ◁PG?(V)▷ •ETYM A technical word without convincing etymology; connection with ►ψάλλω remains hypothetic. The gloss ψαλόν· εἶδος χαλινοῦ 'kind of bit' (H.) is probably a mistake for ψάλιον. Further ψάμματα· σπαράγματα 'fragments' and ψαμματίζουσα· ψωμίζουσα 'feeding morsels' (H.).
•ETYM ψάμμος seems to be a Greek innovation and reminds of ►ἄμαθος. Connection with the group of ►ψῆν has been suggested, but the formation is not clear. In principle, ψάμμος may represent older *ψάφ-μος (cf. γράμμα to ►γράφω) and thus belong to ψαφαρός, ►ψῆφος 'pebble', further to Lat. sabulum 'sand'.
According to Deroy Glotta 35 (1956): 183 (extensive treatment and lit.), ἄμαθος, ἄμμος as well as ψάμαθος, ψάμμος would come from Pre-Greek sam-* 'sand, mud'.
ψάμαθος and ἄμμος may have arisen as crosses between ►ἄμαθος and ψάμμος. See Fur.: 209.

•VAR Gen. ψᾱρός, nom.pl. ψᾶρες (P 755 [gen. ψᾱρῶν], Antiph., Dsc., AP 9, 373).
Also ψήρ, gen. ψηρός, nom. pl. ψῆρες (P 583 [acc. ψῆρας], Q. S., AP 7, 172).
Thematicized ψᾶρος or ψάρος (Arist., Gal.).
•DER ψᾱρός 'starling-colored, grey, speckled' [adj.] (Ar., Arist., LXX); cf. Georgacas Glotta 6 (1958): 193.
•ETYM The difficult epic gen. pl. ψᾱρῶν has been explained by metrical lengthening of *ψᾰρῶν; the oldest flexion, then, would have been ψήρ, gen. *ψᾰρός, to which a new nom. ψᾱ́ρ was created (thus Schmidt KZ 25 (1881): 20; Kretschmer Glotta 4 (1913): 336). On the explanation of the vocalic interchange see also Björck 1950: 45 and 219. The word remains without a certain etymology. It seems impossible to connect the Germanic name of the starling, OHG stara, etc., to which Lat. sturnus 'id.' belongs (and perhaps ►ἀστραλός). See also the bird names mentioned under ►σποργίλος (IE sper-*, see Pok. 991).

•DER ψαῦσις (ἐπί-, σύν-, etc.) [f.] 'touch, caress', ψαῦσμα [n.] 'id.' (X. Eph.).
•ETYM Frisk analyzes it as a rhiming formation to ►χραύω, ►χναύω, ►θραύω, with the anlaut like in ψαίω, ψαίρω [sic!], ψίω. He compares ►ψῆν. However, semantically the word has little to do with ►ψῆν, and a rhiming formation based on it is unlikely. Rather a Pre-Greek word.

Val.); ψογιστής [m.] 'censurer, captious person' (Rhetor.).
•ETYM Old words for 'reproach, blame, revilement' are ὄνειδος (whence ὀνειδίζω since Il.), which is inherited, and μέμφομαι, which is etymologically less clear, but attested from Homer onwards. In comparison with these words, ψέγω seems to be a younger creation. No etymology exists. Connection with ψῆν makes little sense; the same holds for derivation of ψόγος from the interjection ψό (the same holds for ►ψόφος). The word seems to be Pre-Greek, although there is no clear formal argument (except for the initial ψ-).

ψεδνός [adj.] 'thin, sparse', also 'bald' (of hair); secondarily 'bare', of the bottom (B 219, AP, Aret., Luc., Aristid.). ◂PG?▸
•DER ψεδνο-κάρηνος 'bald' (Orph.), -θριξ 'thin-haired' (Tz.), ψεδνότης [f.] 'baldness' (Adam.), ψεδνόομαι [v.] 'to become bald' (S. E.).
•ETYM Connection with ►ψῆν is not evident. Beside ψεδνός, we find synonymous ψηνός (Semon.), ψανός (H.), ψιλός, ψαιδρά· ἀραιότριχα (H.), etc. The word is probably Pre-Greek, like many other words with initial ψ-.
Solmsen 1909: 136[2] suggested that ψεδνός B 219 is an old corruption of the text for earlier *ψαιδνός or *ψιδνός, and he explained all other places from there. But, as Frisk remarks, why would *ψαιδνός (to ψαίω) or *ψιδνός (to ψιλός) have been given up for a seemingly isolated form ψεδνός?

From ψεῦδος: a) ψευδ-άρια [n.pl.] title of a treatise by Euclid. b) ψευδής 'lying, false' (Hes. Th. 229, IA), probably after ἀληθής; besides in the same mg. ψεῦδ-ις (Pi.), -ήμων, -αλέος (Nonn.), ψεῦδ-άλμιον· ψευδές (H.), cf. φυτάλμιος.
2. κατά-, διά-ψευσις [f.] 'false message, deceit' (Str., Stob.), ψευσί-στυξ epithet of Apollo, 'Hater of Lies' (AP). 3. ψεῦσ-μα (also κατά-, διά-) [n.] 'lie, deceit' (Pl., Hell.), καταψευσ-μός [m.] 'slander' (LXX). 4. -της [m.] 'lier' (Ω 261, probably also T 107, Pi., Hdt., S.), fem. -τις (epigr. The expected zero grade in ψυδρός 'fraudulent, false' (Thgn. 122 [v.l. ψυδνός], Lyc.), Ψυδρεύς [m.] month name (Corc., IG 9(1), 682 [IV[a]]), referring to Hermes; also in ψύδος, plur. ψύδη (EM 819, 13, A. Ag. 999 [lyr.]), for which mostly ψύθος, -η is found (A. Ag. 478 and 1089 [lyr.], Call. Fr. 184; EM), and ἔψυθεν· ἐψεύσατο (H.); cf. also ψυθιζομένων· γογγυζόντων 'murmuring'; ψυθιστάς· ψιθυριστάς 'whispering', ψυθῶνες· διάβολοι 'slanderers' (H.).
•ETYM The zero grade found in ψυδρός agrees with Arm. sut (o-stem) [adj.] 'false', [subst.] 'lie'. On the comparison see Clackson 1994: 168f. and Martirosyan 2010 s.v. sut.
Clackson is inclined to believe the proposal by Taillardat BAGB 36 (1977): 344-354 that the Greek word is related to psu-* 'wind' (which is assumed in ψύχω 'to blow' and in Skt.°psu-). Taillardat gives a number of semantic parallels for a development from 'wind' to 'nonsense, idle talk'. Intermediate forms, as far as the semantics are concerned, may be seen in ►ψιθυρίζω and ►ψύδραξ.
The full grade in ψεύδομαι reminds of a Slavic word for 'deceive' in Slk. šudit', Cz. šiditi (see Machek Ling. Posn. 5 (1955): 70f.). If related, the Slavic words would point to an initial cluster *ks-, and we have to reconstruct *k^wseud- for Greek (Pronk and Van Beek, p.c.).

To my mind, the forms with ψυθ- rather point to Pre-Greek origin (variation δ/ θ). The Armenian form may derive from a language cognate to Pre-Greek. Fur.: 197 adduces ψαυδής (inscr. Pholegandros) and ψούδιον 'lie' (H., Phot.).

It remains unclear, however, why the aorist was preferred. Bechtel recognized a noun *ψᾱλᾱ in the first member, referring to μηλ-αφάω 'to touch with the probe (μήλη)'; but this rare verb was rather created after the example of ψηλαφάω, which is a common word. If -αφ- is rather a suffix, the word could be Pre-Greek.

With an enlargement -χ-: ψήχω [v.] 'to stroke, comb, wear away' (IA, etc.), aor. ψῆξαι, ψηχθῆναι, fut. ψήξω, perf. ἔψηγμαι, also prefixed, especially with κατα-. Thence 1. ψῆγμα (ἐπί-) [n.] 'granule, dust which is scraped off' (Hdt., A., Arist., Hell.). 2. ψῆξις (παρά-, ἀπό-) [f.] 'combing, scraping' (X., late medic.). 3. ψήκτρα [f.] 'curry-comb for horses' (S., E., Ar., Hell. pap.), -τρίον [n.] (gloss.), -τρίς, -τρια (H. s.v. ξώστρα), -τρίζω (sch.). ἀπό-ψηκτρον [n.] name of a remedy against ὑπώπια (Gal.), παλίμ-ψηκτρον = deleticia [charta] (gloss.), cf. παλίμψηστον. 4. ψηκτός (μόδιος) 'level' (gloss.), ἀπό-ψηκτός metaph. 'shrewd' (S. Ichn.). To this also belongs 5. ψηχράν· τὴν λεπτήν 'peeled, husked, small' (H., Suid.).
With ᾰ-vocalism (cf. below): ψακτήρ· ψήκτρα and ψάκταν· τὴν ψωκτὴν μάζαν (H.).
With ω-vocalism: 1. ψωμός [m.] 'morsel, bit' (since ι 374), -ίον [n.] (Hell. pap., NT), -ίς [f.] (Arist.), -ίζω 'to put morsels in the mouth, feed' (IA), whence -ισμα, -ισμός; also ψώμηκες· οἱ τοῦ σίτου τὰς ῥίζας ἀπεσθίοντες 'who eat the roots of the grain' (H.), after μύρμηκες, σκώληκες, and ψῶμιγξ· σφήκωμα 'point of a helmet' (H.). 2. ψώρα (Ion. -η) [f.] 'itch' (IA), ψωρός, -αλέος, -ικός, -ώδης, -ίτης, -ιάω, -ίασις, -ωσις. 3. ψωλός 'without foreskin, circumcized, lecherous', also -ή (Dor. -ά) [f.] 'exposed penis' (Ar., Diph.), whence ἀποψωλέω (Ar.), -ων = πόσθων 'with a large penis' (H.). 4. ψωθ-ίον [n.], also -ία [f.] 'bread crumb, etc.' (Pherecr., Poll.). Uncertain 5. ψωδαρέον· αὐχμηρόν 'dry, withered' (H.), for ψωραλέον? 6. ►ψώα 'rotten and malodorous stuff' (A. R. fr. 5). 7. ψωχὸς γῆ· ψαμμώδης 'sandy' (H.), perhaps for ψῶχος· γῆ ψαμμώδης. With an enlargement -χ- (cf. on ψήχω above) also ψώχω [v.] 'to grind, scrub' (Nic., Ev. Luc., Dsc.), also σώχω (Nic.); with κατα- (Hdt.), also with ἀπο-. Unclear is ψωκτόν· τράπεζαν 'table' (H.), cf. ψάκταν above.

•ETYM The glosses ψακτήρ and ψάκταν in H. prove that the basic form of ψῆν, ψήχω was *ψᾱ-, beside ablauting ψω- as found in ψωμός, ψώχω, etc. (Solmsen 1909: 136). Old Indic has been supposed to show a counterpart in the athematic present psā́-ti 'chews, devours', from IE PseH-. An r-derivation is supposed by Nieminen KZ 74 (1956): 168ff. in Lith. sóra 'millet' (< IE psā-rā*: ψώρα); on this Fraenkel 1955 s.v. Cf. also ►ψῆφος.
Skt. psā́-ti, Gr. ψῆν and ψώχω can be explained as vocalic enlargements (psā-, psō- < bʰs-eh₂-, bʰs-oh₂-) of IE bʰes-* in Skt. bábhasti 'to chew, digest'. Beekes Sprache 18 (1972): 126 gave semantic objections; and Mayrhofer EWAia 2: 198 (s.v. psā-) also rejected the connection.
DELG (s.v. *ψήω and Supp.) suggests that the η may continue an ē, i.e. -eh₁-. Finally, Meier-Brügger in DELG Supp. states that the "analyse définitive" of ψῆν has to depart from the root pes-* seen in Hitt. peš(š)-ᶻⁱ 'to rub, scrub (with soap)', with a factitive suffix -eh₂-.
To my mind, the IE explanations must be given up; the group of words is probably Pre-Greek, especially given the coexistence of ►ψαίω, ►ψαύω, ψίω, which cannot be explained if we start from a PIE form.

ψηνός •VAR ψηρός. ⇒ψῆν.

6. Also ψηφόω 'to surface with pebbles, mosaics' (inscr., Lyd.), -ωτός (Lydia [Iᵖ]), -ωσις [f.] (gloss.).
A zero grade ψᾰφ-αρός (-ερός Hp.) 'loose, rotten, crumbled' (IA), whence -αρία [f.] (Dsc.), -αρίτης [m.] (AP), ψαφαρόομαι (Olymp. Alch.); cf. λαγαρός, χαλαρός, etc.
•ETYM A semantic proximity between ψῆφος, ψᾶφος and ψῆν cannot be denied. However, the formal side is difficult, for what would -φ- have to represent? A zero grade ψᾰφ- is also supposed in ψάμμος, if this derives from *ψάφ-μος, and it can also be assumed for Lat. sabulum 'sand' (see on ►ψάμμος). The comparison with Hitt. paššila- 'pebble' (Goetze Lang. 30 (1954): 403) does not make sense formally.
Fur.: 381 compares ψαφαρός with ψαύριος· κονιορτός, φορυτός. οἱ δὲ ψαυρός 'cloud of dust, rubbish' (uncertain).

•ETYM Formerly assumed to be a foreign word of Oriental origin, connected with Skt. śúka- [m.] 'parrot'. Fur.: 325 thinks the Indic word should be left aside, and asks if it could be a Pre-Greek bird name that was transferred to the parrot. The variation does seem to point to Pre-Greek origin. Borrowed as Lat. psittacus > MoHG Sittich.

•ETYM The ending is similar to that of ἄσβολος, θολός, αἴθαλος. Connection with ►ψῆν makes little sense semantically. Fur.: 388 compares ψόθος 'dirt' and also (393) σποδός, ἄ-σβολος (with prothetic vowel). In view of these variants, the word is most probably Pre-Greek.

ψῦχή [f.] 'aspiration, breath, life, vitality, soul (of the deceased), spirit', also as a representation of the dead, seen as a winged creature (ζῷον πτερωτόν) (Il.). ◄PG►
•COMP As a first member e.g. in ψυχ-αγωγός [m.] 'guide of souls, necromancer', whence -ία, -έω (since A.); very productive as a second member, e.g. ἔμ-ψυχος 'animate' (IA), μεγαλό-ψυχος 'magnanimous' (Att., etc.).
•DER 1. Diminutive ψυχ-άριον [n.] (Pl., M. Ant.) > MoGr. ψυχάρι 'butterfly', see Immisch Glotta 6 (1915): 193ff.; -ίον [n.] (epigr. IG 14, 2068), -ίδιον [n.] (Luc., D. C.). 2. ψυχ-ικός 'mental' (Arist., Hell.), -αῖος, -ήϊος 'id.' (late). 3. ψυχόω [v.] 'to animate' (Ph., Nonn.), whence -ωσις [f.] 'animation' (Ph., M. Ant.); also ἐμψυχ-όω, -όομαι (μετ-), whence (μετ-)εμψύχωσις (D. S., Gal.) from ἔμψυχος (see above).
ψύχω [v.] 'to blow' (Hom. only Υ 440), aor. ψῦξαι, pass. (also intr.) ψυχθῆναι (Il.), -ῆναι (Att.), ψῠγ-ῆναι (Hell.), fut. ψύξω, ψυχ-θήσομαι, -ήσομαι, ψῠγήσομαι, perf. ἔψυγμαι (IA), act. ἔψυχα (late). Often prefixed, in various shades of meaning: e.g. ἀνα- 'to take breath', ἀπο-, ἐκ- 'to expire, lose consciousness, die' (Od., IA), but more frequently 'to cool down', also intr. and pass. (Il.), 'to dry (in the wind)' (IA). Also with κατα-, δια-, ἐπι-.
Other words meaning 'cool, cold' are treated s.v. ►ψυχρός.

•ETYM The present ψύχω is clearly the basis of all other verbal forms. The nominal formations fit semantically and formally to the verb: for ψυχή 'soul' from ψύχω 'to blow, breathe', cf. πνεῦμα to πνέω, Lat. animus and anima to Skt. ániti 'to breathe', etc.
Greek had another verb for 'to blow, breathe': πνέω, which remains alive throughout the history of Greek. Therefore, it is generally thought that ψύχω developed its meaning 'to cool, make dry (in the wind)', from 'to blow'. Note that this is now doubted by Mumm and Richter, IJDLLR 5 (2008): 33-108, who argue that the meaning 'cool' is primary to 'breath, soul'. In the meaning 'cool', ψύχω, ψῦχος and ψυχρός are maintained in prose against other expressions for 'cool, cold', like ῥῖγος, κρύος, πάγος.
The earlier history of ψύχω is obscure. It is tempting to analyze it as ψύ-χ-ω (like τρύχω to τρύω, ψήχω and ψώχω to ψῆν), and to connect a verb *b^hes- 'to blow' (Benveniste BSL 33 (1932): 165ff., who compares τρύω to τείρω and Lat. terō). Derivatives of *b^hes- would be seen in Skt. bhástrā- [f.] 'bag, bellows', bhásman- [n.] 'ashes' (for another possibility see on ►ψόλος). Moreover, Skt. °psu- in á-psu 'without breath' (RV) would contain the same extension. See details in Mayrhofer EWAia s.vv. A recent attempt was made by Mumm and Richter (l.c.).
I do not find these suggestions convincing. There is hardly any evidence for an IE root *b^hes- 'to blow' (Mayrhofer EWAia 2: 257 puts the Skt. root bhas[2] between brackets). Therefore, the word is more probably of Pre-Greek origin.

From ψύχω: 10. ψῦχος [n.] 'cold, frost' (κ 555), 'winter' (Hdt.); ψυχόομαι 'to become cold' (Hp.); ψυχάζω 'refresh oneself' (Alciphr.), -ίζομαι (gloss.) 'to cool down', ψυχεινός 'cold' (Hp., X., Arist.), after the opposite ἀλεεινός, perhaps directly from ψύχω; -εῖον [n.] 'place for cooling water' (Semos Hist.). Cf. ψυγεῖα· ἀγγεῖα ἐν οἷς ὕδωρ ψύχεται, καὶ ὁ τόπος αὐτός (H.), also IG 2[2], 1695: 21 [III[a]] (inscr. ψυ[γ]εια)? 11. ψυχρός (like αἶσχος to αἰσχρός, etc.) 'cool, cold, numb; without success, etc.' (Il.), also with κατα-, ἐν-, ὑπο-, etc. Thence ψυχρότης 'cold(ness)', ψυχρία 'id.', ψυχρασία 'making cold' (Epicur.); ψυχραίνομαι 'be cold' (Plu.), whence ψυχραντικός (Hdn.), ψυχρίζομαι 'id.' •VAR Also ᾤα, ὤα, ὄα; gloss ὠῖαι· ἄκραι, ἔσχατα, μηλωταί, λέγναι 'tops, utmost parts, sheepskins, fringes of a garment' (H.).
•ETYM In the sense 'sheepskin, apron (made of sheepskin)', it probably belongs to ►ὄϊς 'sheep' and derives from *ὠϝία or *ὦϝι̯α, with a lengthened grade like in Skt. āvika- [n.] 'sheepskin' (Kretschmer KZ 31 (1892): 456). However, Mayrhofer EWAia s.v. ávi- says that āvika- (ŚB) replaces earlier avyáya- (RV), which casts doubt on the connection.
The meaning 'fringe' can be identical with 'sheepskin' if we assume that it denoted an edge made of sheepskin (Sommer 1905: 18f., 154[1]).

•ETYM Formation like γλωχ-ῖν-, δελφ-ῖν-, ἀκτ-ῖν-, but the root is unclear. It is tempting to connect ►ὀδύνη, but the long initial vowel of ὠδ- has not been explained so far. Van Beek (p.c.) suggests an old reduplicated formation *h$_3$e-h$_3$d-i- of the type Skt. cákri- 'doing' (< *k^{w}e-k^{w}r-i-) from the root *h$_3$ed- 'to bite' (see on ►ὀδύνη for a demarcation of the root). Note that Lith. úodas 'gnat' does not require a lengthened grade: it derives from *h$_3$od-o- by Winter's Law. A connection with 'eat' cannot be demonstrated in Greek (in spite of Λ 415).
Alternatively, the word may be Pre-Greek, because of the suffix -ῑν- (which is already remarked by DELG).

Secondary presents: 1. ὠθίζομαι 'to push each other, jostle, quarrel', -ίζω 'to push' (Hdt., late prose), , also with δι-, εἰσ-, ἐπ-; (δι-, συν-)ὠθισμός [m.] 'pushing, jostle, quarrel' (Hdt., Th., X., Plb.). 2. ὠστίζομαι 'to push about, jostle with someone' (Ar.); ὠστισμός [m.] = ὠθισμός (Moeris).
•ETYM The iterative present ὠθέω is clearly the basic form of the verb in Greek. A link with the present ἔθει, the ptc. ἔθων, ἔθοντες and the nouns ἔθρις, ἔθειρα is highly unlikely; see on these words for objections. It is therefore not clear a priori that ὠθέω contains an old lengthened grade of the type πωλέομαι : πέλομαι (for which cf. Schwyzer: 720). It is attractive to compare the optative in Av. vādāiiōit̰ 'he may push back', and primary forms in Sanskrit, e.g. aor. ávadhīt 'he killed'. Kloekhorst 2008 s.v. further suggests that Hitt. ḫuett-$^{tta(ri)}$ 'to draw, pull, etc.' is related. This nicely fits the long scansion of the initial vowel in Skt. ā́vadhīt (2 times). The fact that the Skt. root is seṭ and that the Hittite verb is consistently spelled with a geminate -tt- (Kloekhorst ibid.) point to a root-final laryngeal. This means that we have to reconstruct a root *h$_2$ued^{h}h$_1$-, whence an iterative *h$_2$uod^{h}h$_1$-éie- yielded Greek ὠθέω. This explanation nicely accounts for the fact that initial ϝ- is not evident for ὠθέω in Homeric scansion. The only problem is that we have to assume a pre-Homeric development *awot^h- > *ὠθ-.

Ὠκεανός [m.] name of a river that surrounds the world, 'ocean' (since Il.). ◂PG(V)▸
•VAR Ὠγήν, -ῆνος (H), Ὠγενός (Lyc., St. Byz.), Ὠγηνός (Pherecyd. Syr. Fr. 2 D).

•ETYM Since the idea of a world-river is not of IE origin, the word must be a loan. All attempts to find an IE etymology have failed: e.g. connection with Skt. ā-śáyāna- 'lying on', approximately equivalent to ἐπικείμενος (literature in WP 1, 358); from IE *ōḱu̯-eianos "(le dieu fleuve) qui a la marche rapide" (to ὠκύς and Skt. áyana- 'course'), Borgeaud IF 66 (1961): 49ff.
Further indications that the word is not inherited from Proto-Indo-European, but rather Pre-Greek, are the variants with γ instead of κ cited above. In the framework of Pre-Greek, the alternation ε/η may be due to *a or *ā influenced by the preceding palatalized *k^y. This is confirmed by the following: as the influence of the palatal must have been strongest in the immediately adjacent part of the vowel, and less in the more remote part, this resulted in a sequence [æa] which was rendered as -εα- in Ὠκεανός. In other forms, the vowel was changed as a whole, which resulted in Ὠγήν. Therefore, I reconstruct a Pre-Greek form *ūkān (with ὠ- from *ū-).

As a second member in ποδ-ώκης, epithet of Ἀχιλλεύς and others, also πόδας ὠκύς, ὠκύ-πους (Il.); these compounds seem to presuppose a neuter *ὦκος. After this ἱππ-ώκης, ἀνεμ-ώκης (B., E. [lyr.]).

•ETYM The archaic adjective ὠκύς was pushed away and replaced by ταχύς at an early date. It is etymologically identical with Skt. āśú- and Av. āsu- < QIE HoHḱ-ú-. It is quite possible that the pre-form is actually IE h̥₁o-h₁ḱ-ú- 'swift', and that it contains the same root and suffix as h₁eḱ-uo-* 'horse' (see on ►ἵππος).
Latin preserves the comparative Lat. ōcior = Skt. ā́śīyān, Av. āsiiå̄. Celtic only preserved it in composition with a negative prefix, e.g. W di-auc 'slow' < "un-fast".
Lat. acu-pedius probably contains h₂eḱ-* 'sharp', while it is possible that Lat. accipiter 'hawk, falcon' derives from an old zero grade HHḱu-petro-* 'fast-flying', cf. Gr. ὠκύπτερος. On the other hand, Greek also uses ὀξύ-, e.g. in ὀξύ-πους 'swift-footed' (E.), ὀξύ-πτερος 'with swift wings' (Aesop.), ὀξύ-ρροπος 'inclining swiftly' (Pl.).

•ETYM Within Greek, we find different ablauting variants of an n-stem: ὠλήν, -ένος (cf. αὐχήν, -ένος), enlarged ὠλένη, and ὠλλόν < *ὠλνόν. Also, there is a short initial vowel in ὀλέκρᾱνον < ὀλένο-κρᾱνον.
Related words, mainly from European languages, are: Lat. ulna '(bone of the) elbow, forearm' < olen-*, the Germanic group of OHG elina 'ell' < alin-*, and the Celtic group of MW elin 'elbow' < olēn-. It may be that these ultimately go back on forms with a long initial vowel ōlén-, ōlḗn-*, which was shortened in pretonic position in these languages (Dybo's Law).
Balto-Slavic forms like Lith. úolektis, Latv. uôlekts 'ell' < HoHl-ek-ti-*, OPr. alkunis, Lith. alkū̃nė (arch.) 'elbow' < HHol-k-* and OCS lakъtь [m.], Ru. lókot' 'id.' < HHolkuti-* show that the word was not an n-stem in PIE yet, and that the initial long vowel, which is acute in Baltic, must be due to a pre-form HoHl-*. It is possible that an n-stem was made to this form in the Western languages in late PIE.
The n-stem is also found in Arm. uln, gen. ulan, nom.pl. ulun-k', but in the sense of 'vertebrae, neck'. A similar formation is shown by Arm. ołn, gen. ołin, plur. ołun-k' 'dorsal vertebra, spine, back, shoulder' from IE olen-*, olon-. However, it is unclear if the semantic difference between Armenian and the other languages can be bridged (see now Martirosyan 2010 s.v. uln.
The precise reconstruction of Skt. aratní- [m.] 'elbow' is not quite clear, but cf. Lubotsky 1990; Skt. āṇí- [m.] 'the part of the leg directly above the knee, axle-pin' does not belong here, see Pinault BSL 98 (2003).

ToA es [m.] 'shoulder, element, etc.', and ToB āntse [m.] 'id.; bough' go back to PTo. anse*. ToA es has e from an* before s, and in ToB, t-epenthesis is regular. The PTo. a-vocalism is problematic, as a development h_3mC-* or $h_3$emC-* > anC-* is unexpected.
The unclear gloss ἀμέοω· ὠμοπλάται (H.) is probably foreign in view of the preserved intervocalic -σ-; cf. Latte ad loc. It is unnecessary to postulate a special lengthened grade IE ōmso-* for ὦμος. Rather, Aeol. ἐπομμάδιος (in Theoc. 29, 29 as a v.l. for ἐπωμάδιος) most probably points to PGr. omso-*. Dunkel 1995 has suggested that the forms with long vowel as a reflex of the first compensatory lengthening are survivals from Mycenaean (i.e. borrowings into the poetic language).

•COMP Very frequent as a first member, e.g. ὠμ-ηστής, Dor. -τάς [m.] 'eating raw flesh, ὠμο-φάγος, sanguinary, wild' (Il., epic poet.), a compound from ὠμός and ἔδω with a suffix -τᾱ- and old contraction (cf. Skt. āmād- 'id.' from āma-ad-); ὠμ-ήλυσις [f.] 'grist from raw grains', especially in preparing a poultice (Hp.), from the root $h_2$leu-* of ►ἀλέω (the simplex *ἄλυσις was later replaced by ἄλεσις), with later folk-etymological connection with λύσις, λύω ("μετὰ ὠμῆς λύσεως", Dsc.). As a second member in ἔν-ωμος 'something raw' (Hp.).
•ETYM Old adjective for 'raw', identical with Skt. āmá- and Arm. hum < QIE ōmó-. The word probably represents h_3eHmos or h_2e$h_3$mos* (see Kortlandt 2003: 42, 73, 123, 163, 183). See also De Vaan 2008 s.v. amārus.

ὦνος [m.] 'purchase price, buy' (Hom., also A. R., Theoc., inscr. Delos [III^a]). ◂IE uos-no-* 'purchase price'▸ •VAR More usual is ὠνή (IA).
•DIAL Dor. ὠνά, Aeol. ὄννα [f.] 'purchase, purchase-charter' (partly adapted to the verb, e.g. συνων-ή [late] from συν-ωνέομαι). On Samian ονονημένα see Ringe Glotta 62 (1984): 45-56.
•DER εὔ-ωνος 'at a good price, low-priced' (Epich., IA), -ώνης [m.] (from the verb or closely related to it), e.g. τελ-ώνης 'toll-holder, levier of tax' (Att., Hell.), ὤν-ιος 'buyable', τὰ ὤνια 'merchandise' (Epich., Att.), -ιακός 'id.' (pap. [VI^p], Just. Nov.).
Denominative verb ὠνέομαι (Hes.+) 'to buy', also with ἀντι-, ἐκ-, συν-, etc.; aor. ὠνήσασθαι (Ion., also recent Att. for πρίασθαι), pass. ὠνηθῆναι, fut. ὠνήσομαι, Dor. 3sg. ὠνασεῖται (Sophr.), pass. ὠνηθήσομαι (Theopomp. Com.), perf. (med. and pass.) ἐώνημαι (Att.). Cret. also has the act. ὠνέω 'to offer for sale, sell' (Leg. Gort., etc.).
Thence 1. ὤνημα [n.] 'buy' (Att. inscr.), also βώνημα· εἴρημα. Λάκωνες (H.)? 2. ὤνησις [f.] 'the buying' (Att. decree apud Poll.). 3. ὠνητής (Att.), ὠνατάς (Delphi II^a) [m.] 'buyer', whence -ητιάω 'to be desirous of buying, wish to buy' (Thphr., D. C., Poll.), -ήτωρ 'id.' (late). 4. ὠνη-τός 'buyable, bought', e.g. of slaves (since ξ 202), -τικός 'desirous of buying' (Ph.). 5. Desiderative ὠνησείω 'wish to buy' (D. C.).

•ETYM Both ὠνέομαι and the old aor. πρίασθαι were replaced, in the course of time, by ἀγοράζω and ἀγοράσαι. Beside ὦνος < uós-no-* (see below) stands Lat. vēnum (acc.) in vēnum dare 'to give for sale', Arm. gin, gen. gn-oy 'purchase-price', both from IE uesno-*. Ambiguous as to the vocalism is Skt. vasná- [n.] (also [m.]) 'puchase-price', whence vásniya- 'vendible, venal' (cf. Gr. ὤνιος) and denominative vasnayáti in the ptc. du. -ayántā 'to bargain', cf. Gr. ὠνέω, both reflecting uos-n-éie-*.
It is not necessary to posit an awkward lengthened grade pre-form uōs-no-* for ὦνος, see on ►ὦμος. The noun ues-no-, uos-no- belongs to a primary verb still preserved in Hittite: 2sg. u̯ašti, 3sg. u̯āši 'to purchase, acquire' < uos-e-i*. A zero grade us-n-* is preserved in the denominative verb ušnii̯e/a-^zi 'to offer for sale, sell'. Kloekhorst 2008 s.v. ušnii̯e/a-^zi argues that this form shows that the noun for 'sale' originally was an n-stem uos-n*, gen. us-en-s*, which was later thematicized in the individual IE languages. This would nicely explain the different root vowels of Armenian, Greek and Latin.

ᾠόν [n.] 'egg' (IA). ◂IE h_2ōui-o-* 'egg'▸ •VAR ὠόν (Hell.), ὤϊον (Sapph.), also ὤεον (Epich., Ibyc., Semon., Hell. poetry); ὤβεα· τὰ ᾠά. Ἀργεῖοι (H.), if = ὤϝεα.
•COMP As a first member e.g. in ᾠο-τόκος 'laying eggs', whence -τοκία, -τοκέω (Arist.).
•DER Diminutive ᾠ-ύφιον [n.] (Theognost., pap. II^p), -ώδης 'egg-shaped' (Arist.).
•ETYM An old word for 'egg', preserved in several languages, but in various forms: Lat. ōvum, OHG ei, ON egg < PGm. ai̯i̯a-* [n.], in Iranian e.g. MoP xāya < PIr. āya-* without a trace of -u-. In Slavic we find the diminutive OCS ajьce, Ru. jajcó < PSl. āje-* < IE ōio-*. Arm. ju, gen. juoy (from i̯ōi̯o-*?), Alb. ve, voe, and Celtic forms like W wy have an unclear pre-form.
The many attempts to obtain a unified account of the different forms have not lead to a conclusive result. See the extensive and careful treatment by Schindler Sprache 15 (1969): 144 ff. (with rich lit.); there also on the possibility to connect the word for 'egg' with that for 'bird' (Lat. avis, etc.).

ὥρα [f.] 'season, year, time of day, hour, right time, florescence, time of ripening', plur. also personified 'the Hours' (Il.); Hell. and late also ὧρος [m.] 'year' (gender perhaps after ἐνιαυτός), plur. ὧροι 'annals' (of Ionian writers). ◂IE Hieh_1-r-*, Hioh_1-r- 'year'▸ •VAR Ion. ὥρη.
•COMP E.g. ὡρη-φόρος 'leading on the seasons, bringing on the fruits in their season', epithet of Demeter (h. Cer., Orph.), ὡρο-λόγιον [n.] 'hour hand, sundial, water clock' (Hell. and late), ἄ-ωρος 'untimely, unpretty' (IA, Cret.), also ἄν-ωρος and ἀ-ώριος 'id.' (Thphr.), ἐννέ-ωρος 'nine years old' (Hom.), 'for nine hours' (Herod.).
•DER 1. ὡρ-αῖος 'according to the season, timely, ripe, florescent, beautiful' (Hes.), often substantivized, e.g. τὰ ὡραῖα 'fruits of the season' (IA); on ὡραῖα γάμου see Fatouros Glotta 54 (1976): 239f. Thence ὡραιότης [f.] 'florescence, beauty' (X., LXX), -αΐζομαι, -ᾴζομαι 'to be beautiful, blossom, act nobly' (Att. com.), also with ἐν-, ἐξ-;

-αΐζω, -ᾴζω 'id.' (Amorgos III[p]), 'to make beautiful' (Aristid. Quint.), whence -αϊσμός, -αϊστής.
2. ὥρ-ιος (epic poet. since ι 131, late prose), poet. for -αῖος, see Treu 1955: 230f.; ὡρ-ιαίνομαι, -ιαίνω = -αΐζομαι, -αΐζω (Clearch., H.).
3. ὥρ-ιμος 'timely, ripe' (Leg. Gort., Herod., Hell. pap., AP), whence -ιμότης, -ιμαία, -ιμάζω.
4. ὡρικός 'florescent, youthful, beautiful' (Ar., Crates Com., Ael.). 5. ὡριαῖος 'for one hour' (Hipparch., Ptol.). 6. Ὡρίτης epithet of Apollo (Lyc.).
•ETYM Greek ὥρα continues IE *$HioH$-r-h_2, which matches the Germanic cognates Go. jer, OHG jār [n.] 'year' < PGm. i̯ēra-* [n.], IE Hieh₁-r-*. In Slavic, we find CS jara 'spring' and (with an old r-stem) Av. yārə [n.] 'year'.
On a trace of the word in Latin hornus 'grown in this year' (supposedly from ho-i̯ōr-ino-*, with a prefix like in OHG hiuru 'this year' < hiu jāru*), see De Vaan 2008 s.v. It is probable that the word contains the root Hieh₁-* 'to send'; for the semantics, we may compare MoHG Geschick 'fate' from schicken 'to send'.
A loan word from Greek is Lat. hōra.

•VAR Ion. ὤρη.
•COMP As a second member in οὐδενόσ-ωρος 'worth no notice or regard', epithet of τείχεα (Θ 178), of ὀστέον (Opp. H. 2, 478), cf. Bechtel 1914 s.v.; ὀλίγ-ωρος 'taking few precautions, indifferent, reckless', whence ὀλιγωρέω, -ωρία (IA). The same element is contained in ► θεωρός, ► τιμωρός, but not in ► εὐθυωρία.
•ETYM From *ϝώρα, with a lengthened grade like λώπη, λώγη, etc. and derived from the root 'to be attentive, care for', which is also contained in ► ὁράω. Note the gloss βῶροι (= ϝ-)· ὀφθαλμοί 'eyes' (H.).

ὡρᾱκιάω [v.] 'to faint, be or become dizzy', later also 'to become pale' (Ar., late prose). ◁IE? uoH-r-* 'faint', PG?(S)▷ •VAR Also ὡρ-; aor. -ιᾶσαι. Also ὡρακίζω 'id.' (EM).
•ETYM As a verb of disease in -ιάω, it probably derives from *ὤραξ 'dizziness, vel sim.', formed like νέαξ, πλούταξ, κνώδαξ, etc. This in turn derives from a noun *ὦρος or *ὤρα that could be identified with ON órar [f.pl.] 'fits of mind-confusion' < IE uoH-rh₂-*, and (with a suffix -ja-) ON ǿrr 'dizzy' < IE uoH-r-io-*. On the derivational type see Björck 1950: 260ff.
As a root etymology between only Greek and Germanic, the Indo-European proposal is not strong. Because of the element -ᾱκ-, the word could also be Pre-Greek.

ὤρυγγες [m.pl.] 'striped or piebald horses, including zebras' (Opp. K. 1, 317). ◁PG(S)▷ •ETYM Fur.: 279 compares ὄρυξ 'a kind of gazelle in Libya' (Arist.). He asks whether it is the same word as ὄρυς 'wild animal from Libya' (Hdt. 4, 192). The prenasalized suffix -υ(γ)γ- seems to point to a Pre-Greek word.

ὠρυγή •VAR Also ὤρυγμα, ὠρυγμός. ⇒ὠρύομαι.

•VAR Aor. ὠρῡ́σασθαι (ἀν-, ἀντ-, κατ-).
•DER ὠρῡδόν [adv.] 'howling' (Nic.), ὤρῡμα [n.] 'howling' (LXX), ὠρῡτός [m.] 'id.' (Theognost.). Often enlarged with -γ-: ὠρυγή (Dor. -ά) [f.] (Erinn., Plu., Poll.), ὠρυγμός [m.] (Ael., Longus, Poll.), ὤρυγμα [n.] (AP) 'id.'; ὠρυκτάς [m.] (Dor.) 'howler, howling' (Hymn. Is.). Also ὠρυθμός [m.] 'id.' (Opp., Q. S.; also Theoc. as a v.l. beside -γμός), after κλαυθμός.
•ETYM Cognate with Skt. rauti, ruváti 'to howl, roar' (seṭ-root rav^i-), OCS rjuti 'id.', 1sg. rovǫ, which presupposes a root HreuH-*. This perfectly matches the Greek data, which also point to a root-final laryngeal. Other cognates are Lat. rūmor 'noise', Lat. ravis 'hoarseness', YAv. uruuaṇt- 'roaring'.
Forms with a velar enlargement (like ὠρυγή) are found in Latin, e.g. Lat. rūgiō 'to roar', and in Ru. rykát', Lith. rū̃kti 'id.', 1sg. rū̃kiu. They remind of Gr. ἐρυγεῖν (see ► ἐρεύγομαι 2, etc.), ὀρυγμάδες, ► ὀρυμαγδός, but it is unclear if they are old.
Initial ὠ- is unexplained; there is not enough evidence for a prefix ὠ- in Greek (as per Brugmann-Delbrück 1897-1916 2:2, 817, who compares Skt. ā́ ruva [ipv.] 'cry with' [RV 1, 10, 4]).

ὡς 1 [adv., conj.] 'as, so far as', also temporal 'when', causal 'because', final 'therewith', perhaps also as an exclamation (Il.). ◁IE Hio-* 'which'▷ •VAR Dor. also ὡ.
•DER To this ὥστε (Dor. ὥτε), ὥσπερ, etc.
•ETYM Old instrumental-ablative of the relative pronoun ὅς, like Av. yā [instr.], Skt. yā́t [abl.], IE Hioh₁*, Hiōd*. On the auslauting -ς see ► ἕως 2. ὥς 2 [adv.] demonstrative: 'thus' (Il.). ◁IE so-*▷ •VAR Note the accentuation of καὶ ὥς, οὐδ' ὥς, ὧδε (see Vendryes 1904).

ὡς 3 [postpos.] 'as, like' (epic), e.g. ἴσαν ὄρνιθες ὥς (Γ 2). ◁IE se, seue*▷ •ETYM Because ὥς 'like' often makes position, it is usually derived from ϝως < IE suō, beside suē* in Go. swe 'as, like'; cf. also OLat. suad 'sic' (Festus). See Chantraine 1942: 126.

•VAR With acc., only with persons.
•ETYM Origin unclear; several propositions in Schwyzer 1950: 534.

ὤσχη •VAR ὠσχοί. ⇒ὄσχη 2.

ὠτειλή [f.] 'wound', especially referring to close combat in Hom. (Hom., Hp., X., Plu.); see Trümpy 1950: 93ff. ◁?, PG?▷
•VAR Aeol. ὠτέλλα (gramm.).

•DER ὠτειλόομαι [v.] 'to scar' (Hp., Aret.), also with περι-, ἐν-; ὠτειλῆθεν 'from the wound' (Orph.).
•ETYM The formation is unclear, and the etymology is controversial. Greek formations which are candidates to be cognate are γατάλαι· οὐλαί (H.), if = ϝατ-, οὐτάω [v.] 'to wound', βωτ[ε]άζειν· βάλλειν (H.), if = ϝωτ-, and (less probable) ἄτη 'damage, guilt, blindness' < *ἀϝάτη. Bechtel 1914 s.v. remarked that a pre-form *ὀϝα- is possible everywhere in Homer except at τ 456.
From other languages, Lith. votìs 'ulcer' and and Latv. vâts '(festering) wound' are compared, which seem to require ueh_2-ti-. Direct connection of ὠτειλή with Lith. votēlis (which is a diminutive from votìs) should be rejected in any case.

•COMP Some compounds, e.g. ὠχρο-μέλας 'dark and sallow', said of somebody who suffers from jaundice (medic.), cf. Risch IF 59 (1949): 60; ἔξ-ωχρος 'very pale' (Arist., Thphr., Aret.), see Strömberg 1946: 68.
•DER 1. ὦχρος [m.] 'paleness' (Γ 35; after this AP et al.), usually name of a sallow-colored leguminous plant, 'birds' pease, Lathyrus Ochrus' (com. IV[a], Arist., Thphr., Hell. pap.). On the gender see below. 2. ὤχρα [f.] 'sallow color, ochre-color' (Arist., Thphr., Hell. pap.); also = ἐρυσίβη, 'mildew' (LXX), in this sense also ὠχρία [f.] (EM). 3. ὠχρίας [m.] 'man with a pale hue' (Arist.). 4. -ότης [f.] 'paleness' (Pl., Arist.), -οσύνη [f.] 'id.' (late). 5. verbs: ὠχρῆσαι [aor.] 'to become pale' (λ 529, Aret., AP), also with κατ-; (κατ-)ωχριάω 'id.' (Ar., Arist., Babr.), whence -ίασις (late); ὠχραίνω 'to become pale' (Nic.), 'to make pale' (Orph.), -αίνομαι 'to become pale' (S. E., Sor.), whence -αντικῶς [adv.] 'making pale' (S. E.).
•ETYM The connection with Skt. vyāghrá- [m.] 'tiger' is untenable for formal reasons (what would the element ὠ- = -ā- have to represent, and what is vi-?). Wackernagel hesitatingly supposed (see Wackernagel 1916: 234f.) that a neuter ὦχρος (like μάκρος/ μακρός) would have replaced an older *ὦχος [n.] in Homer, like αἶσχος to αἰσχρός, ψῦχος to ψυχρός, etc.

•VAR The gender is disputed: fem. acc. to EM 344, 55; msc. acc. to Ar. Byz., Eust. and other sources (probably after ὀφθαλμός; cf. EM 233, 32); ntr. acc. to Sommer 1948: 10. Old only in fixed expressions ►ἐνῶπα (only in κατ' ἐνῶπα), εἰς ὦπα 'in the face, eye in eye' (Hom., Hes.); recent forms are ὤπεσσι [dat.pl.] (Max.), μεγάλους ὦπας [acc.pl.] (Ar. Byz.), etc., τὰ ὦπα (Pl. Cra. 409c regarding an etymology).
•COMP As a second member in ►ἑλίκωψ, ►μύωψ and other forms; these may have compositional lengthening (Schwyzer: 426[4]). To this numerous feminine formations, e.g. ἑλικ-ῶπις, βο-ῶπις (perhaps originally -ῶπῑς < -iH-s, see Chantraine 1942: 208 and Ruijgh 1995: 76f.

•DER Hypostases: on ἐν-ώπιος, -ιον, -ῆ, see ►ἐνῶπα; ἐξ-ώπιος 'out of sight, without' (E.); εἰσ-ωπός (to εἰς ὦπα) 'face to face, right in front of' (O 653, A. R., Arat.); ὑπ-ώπια [n.pl.] 'part of the face below the eyes, bruise under the eyes' (since M 463), rarely -ιον [sg.]; μέτ-ωπον, ►πρόσωπον.
Further derivations: 1. ὠπ-ή [f.] 'sight, view' (A. R., Nic.). 2. ὤπια· ὀφρύδια 'eyebrows' (H.). 3. ὠπάω [v.] 'to observe' in ὠπῶντες (EM 322, 9 regarding ἑλίκ-ωπες), med. aor. ὠπήσασθαι (Opp.), fut. -ήσεσθαι· ὄψεσθαι (H.). With prefix ἐπ-ωπάω [v.] 'to contemplate, overview, supervise' (A.), to which ἐπωπή [f.] 'observation post, watch' (A. Supp. 539 [lyr.]), TN Ἐπώπη = Ἀκροκόρινθος (St. B.), -εύς [m.] eponymous name of kings (Apollod.), name or epithet of a god (Mycale [IV[a]]), Ἐπωπίς· Δημήτηρ παρὰ Σικυωνίοις and -ίδες· ἐπίσκοποι, ἀκόλουθοι παρὰ Λακεδαιμονίοις 'watchmen, followers (Lacon.)', also -έτης· Ζεὺς παρὰ Ἀθηναίοις (H.). Enlarged ἐπωπάζει· ἐφορᾷ, ἐποπτεύει 'to oversee, observe' (H.).
•ETYM Old formation with lengthened grade beside ►ὄψ 'eye, face'; see on ►ὄπωπα for further connections.
